1. Coolness of temper.

This cruel quietness neither returning to dislike nor proceeding to favour; gracious, but generous still after one manner. Sadru.

That which is move for our better instruction sake, turneth into anger and choler in them; they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer humnly. Hooker.

2. Peace; tranquillity.

Stop effusion of our christian blood, And establish quietness on every side. Shakespeare.

What miseries have both actions avoided, and what quietness and security attained by their peaceable union? Haywood.

3. Stillness; calmness.

If we compare the quietness and chastity of the Bolognese pencil to the bustle and tumult that fills every part of a Venetian picture, with all the least attempt to interest the passions, their boasted art will appear a mere struggle without effect. Reynolds.

QUIET-SOME. adj. [from quiet.] Calm; still; undisturbed. Not in use.

Let the night be calm and quiescent, Without tempestuous storms or sad alloy. Spenser.

QUIETUDE. n. f. [quietude, French; from quiet.] Rest; repose; tranquillity. Not in common use.

From the equal distribution of the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and serenity in the sensations. Watson.

QUILL. n. f.

1. The hard and strong feather of the wing, of which pens are made.

With her humble quills his soul doth seem to hover, And eye the very pitch that lully bird did cover. Dryden.

Birds have three other hard substances proper to them; the bill, which is of a like matter with the teeth, the shell of the eye, and their quill. Bacon.

2. The instrument of writing.

I will only touch the duke's own deportment in that island, the proper subject of my quill. Watson. Those lives they said to rescue by their skill, Their mists would make immortal with her quill. Garth.

Is but a quintain, a mere little's block. Shakspere.

QUINTAL. n. f. [centupondium, Latin.] A hundred weight to weigh with.

QUINTESENCE. n. f. [quinta essentia, Latin.]

1. A fifth being.

From their gross matter she abstracts the forms,

And draws a kind of quintessence from things. Davies.

The ethereal quintessence of heav'n

Flow upward, and mix with various forms,

That soul'd orbicular, and turn'd to stars. Milton.

They made air, fire, earth, and water, to be the four elements, of which all earthly things were compounded, and supposed the heavens to be a quintessence or fifth sort of body diamet from all these. Watts.

2. An extract from any thing, containing all its virtues in a small quantity.

To me what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me, nor woman neither. Shakspere.

Who can in memory, or wit, or will,

Or air, or fire, or earth, or water find?

What alchymist can draw, with all his skill,

The quintessence of these out of the mind? Davies.

For I am a very dead thing,

In whom love wrought new alchymy,

For by his heart he did excrete,

A quintessence even from nothingness, Donne.

From dull privations and lean empayres,

Paracelsus, by the help of an interde cold, teaches to separate the quintessence of win.

Let there be light! said God; and forthwith

Ethereal, first of things, quintessence pure,

Spring from the deep. Milton.

When the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity and complacency upon the whole soul, infinitely beyond the greatest bodily pleasures, the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delights.

QUINTESENTIAL. adj. [from quintessence.] Consisting of quintessence.

Venturous afflictions as would have puzzled the authors to have made them good, specially considering that there is nothing contrary to the quintessential matter and circular figure of the heavens, so neither is there to the light thereof. Hakewill.

QUINTIN. n. f. [I know not whence derived; Minthwa deduces it from quintus, Latin, and calls it a game celebrated every fifth year; pallus quintanus, Latin, Ainsworth; quintaine, French.] An upright post, on the top of which a cross-pole turned upon a pin; at one end of the cross-pole was a broad board, and at the other a heavy sand bag: the play was to ride against the broad end with a lance, and palsy by, before the sand bag, coming round, should strike the tilter on the back.

At quintin he,
In honour of his bride/tee,
Hath challeng'd either wide countree;
Come out and long talk, for there be Six batchlors as bold as he,
Adjusting to his company,
And each one hath his livery. Ben Jonson.

QUINTUPLE. adj. [quintuplus, Latin.] Fivefold.

In the country, the greatest proportion of mortality, one hundred and fifty-six, is above quintuple unto twenty-eight the least. Gronov.

QUIP. n. f. [derived by the etymologists, from quip.] A sharp jest; a taunt; a tauntum.

Notwithstanding all her hidden quips,

The least which of would quell a lover's hope,

Yet, spangle like, the more the puns my love,

The more it grows, and fawneth on her skill. Shaksp.

If I sent him word he heard was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself.

this is called the quip mode. Shakspere.

Nymph bring with thee

Jest and youthful jollity,

Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,

Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles. Milton.

TO QUIP. v. a. To rally with bitter sarcasms. Ainsworth.

QUIRE. n. f. [choeur, Fr. choro, Italian.]

1. A body of singers; a chorus.

The trees did bud and early blossoms bore,

And all the quire of birds did sweetly sing,

And told that garden's pleasures in their evening. Spenser.

Myself have lov'd a bash for her,

And plac'd a quire of such entring birds,

That the will light to listen to their lays. Shaksp.

At thy vanity a glorious quire

Of angels in the fields of Beulah sung

To shepherds watching at their flocks by night,

And told them the Messiah now was born. Milton.

I may worship thee

For ay, with temples sow'd and virgin quires. Milton.

Begin the song, and strike the livelying lyre,

Let how the years to come, a numerous and well fitted quire.

All hand in hand do decently advance,

And to my song with smooth and equal measures dance. Cowley.

As in beauty she surpass'd the quire,

So nobler than the rest was her attire. Dryden.

2. The part of the church where the service is sung.

I am all on fire,

Not all the buckets in a country quire

Shall quench my rage. Clarendon.

Some ran for buckets to the lull'd quire,

Some cut the pipes, and some the organs play. Dry.

The fox obscene to gaping tombs retires,

3. [choir, Fr.] A bundle of paper consisting of twenty-four sheets.

TO QUIRE. v. n. [from the noun.] To sing in concert.

There's not the final orbit which thou behold'st,

But in his motion like an angel sings,

Still quiring to the young ey'd cherubims. Shaksp.

My throat of war be turn'd

Which, quired with my dream, into a pipe

Small as an eunuch, or the virgin's voice

That habbes lull asleep. Shakspere.

QUIRISTER. n. f. [from quire.] Chorister;

one who sings in concert, generally in divine service.

The coy quiry es, that lodge within,

And prodigal harmony Thomson.

QUIRK. n. f. [Of this word I can find no rational derivation.]

1. Quick stroke; sharp fit.

I've felt so many quirts of joy and grief,

That the full face of neither on the trait,

Can woman me unto't. Shakspere.

2. Smart taunt.

Some kind of men quarrel purposely on others to title their valour; belike, this is a man of that quirk. Shakspere.

I may chunee to have some odd quirks and remain

nants of wit broken on me. Shakspere.

3. Slight concert.

Quints, puns, quirks or quibbles, jests and repurbs may agreeably entertain, but have no place in the search after truth. Watts.

4. Flight of fancy. Not in use.

Most fortunately he hath arriv'd a maid,

That paragon's description and wild fame,

One that excells the quorks of blarney pens. Shak.

5. Subtly; nicely; artful distinction.

Let a lawyer tell me he has found some defect in an entail, how tedious are they to repair that error, and have nothing to the mercy of a law

quark. Dewey of Piety.

There are a thousand quirks to avoid the stroke of the law. L'Esrange.

6. Looks light tune.

Now the chapel's silver bell you hear,

That summons you to all the pride of prayer;

Light quorks of music, broken and uneven. Pope.

TO QUIR. v. a. pass. quit; pret. I quit or quitted. [quiter, Fr. quitare, Ital.

quitor, Spanish.]

1. To discharge an obligation; to make even.

We will be quit of this oath, which thou hast made us to swear. Jephthah.

By this act, old tyrant,

I shall be quit with thee; while I was virtuous,

I was a stranger to thy blood, but now

See thou wilt love me for this horrid crime. Denh.

To John I ow'd great obligation;

But John, unhappily, thought fit

To publish it to all the nation;

Sure John and I are more than quit. Prior.

2. To set free.

Thou art quit from a thousand calamities; therefore let thy joy, which should be as great for thy freedom from them, as thy sadness when thou feelest any of them, do the same cure upon thy

From cloth I fly not death, nor would prolong

Life much; bent rather how I may be quit

From such a tedious and this unkind charge. Mitt.

To quit, out of this tear, you have already looked death in the face; what have you found for terrible in it? Wake.

3. To carry through; to discharge; to perform.

Never worthy prince a day did quit

With greater hazard, and with more renown. Don.

4. To clear himself of an affair; with the reciprocal pronoun.

Sanson hath quit himself

Like Sanson, and heroically hath himself

A life heroic, on his enemies

Fully reveng'd; hath left them 3 cars of mourning.

Milton.

5. To repay; to requite.

He said the knight saluted, louting low,
Who said him quitted, as that courteous was. Spens.
Enkindle all the sparks of nature,
To quit this horrid act. Shakespeare.

6. To vacate obligations.

For our reward,
All our debts are paid; dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments against us quitted. Ben Jonson.

One step higher

Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
The debt unnumber'd of endless gratitude. Milton.
7. To pay any obligation; to clear a debt;
to be tantamount.

They both did fail of their purpose, and got not so much as to quit their charges; because truth, which is the secret of the most high God, whose proper handy-work all things are, cannot be compass'd with that wit and those senses which are our own. Hobbes.

Does not the air feed the flame? and does not the flame at the same time warm and enlighten the air, and does not the earth quit scores with all the elements in the noble fruits that issue from it? South.
Still I shall hear and never quit the score,
Stunn'd with hourly Codrus' thefts o'er and o'er. Dryden.

Iron works ought to be confined to certain places, where there is no conveyance for timber to places of want, so as to quit the cost of the carriage. Temple.

8. [Contracted from acquit.] To absolve;
to acquit.

Not further seek what their offences be,
Guiltless I quit, guilty I set them free. Faust.

9. To pay.

Far other plaints, tears, and laments
The time, the place, and our estates require,
Think on thy sins, which man's old foe presents
Before that judge that quits each soul his hire. Faust.

10. To abandon; to forsake.

Their father,
Then old and fond of ill, took such sorrow,
That he quit being. Shakespeare.

Honours are promis'd
To all will quit em, and rewards propos'd
Even to slaves that can detect their courtes. R. Jon.

Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding, such a superfluous way of examining is to quit truth for appearance, only to serve our vanity. Locke.

11. To resign; to give up.

The prince, renown'd in bounty as in arms,
With pity saw the ill conceal'd status,
Quitted his title to Campaspe's charms,
And gave the last one to the friend's embrace. Prior.
QUITTENASS. n. f. [epic, Sax. gramen
caninum, Lat.] Dog-grass.

They are the best seen to grow on grounds subject to quitch-grass or other weeds. Mortimer.

QUITE. adv. [This is derived, by the etymologists, from quitta, discharged, free, French; which, however at first appearance unlikely, is much favoured by the original use of the word, which was in this combination, quite and clean;
that is, with a clean riddance: its present signification was gradually introduced.] Completely; perfectly; totally; thoroughly.

Those latter exclude not the former quite and clean as unnecessary. Hobbes.

He hath sold us, and quite devoured our money. Genius.

If some foreign ideas will offer themselves, reject them, and hinder them from running away with our thoughts quite from the subject in hand. Locke.

The same action may be aimed at different ends,
and arise from quite contrary principles. Spectator.

QUITTENT. n. f. [quit and rent.] Small rent reserved.

Such a tax would be insensible, and pass but as a small quittent, which every one would be content to pay towards the guard of the seas. Temple.

My old master, a little before his death, wished him joy of the estate which was falling to him, desiring him only to pay the gifts of charity he had left as quittents upon the estate. Spectator.

QUITS. interj. [from quit.] An exclamation used when any thing is repayed and the parties become even.

QUITTANCE. n. f. [quittance, French.]

1. Discharge from a debt or obligation;
an acquittance.

Now I am rememb'red, he scorn'd at me!
But that's all one, acquittance is no quittance. Shakespeare.

2. Recompence; return; repayment.

Mine eyes saw him in bloody tints,
Read'ring forth quittance, wearied and outbreath'd,
To Henry Mountbath. Shakespeare.

Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward; no need but he repays
Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him
But lured the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance. Shakespeare.

We shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit. Shakespeare.

TO QUITTANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To repay; to recompence. Not used.
Embrace me then this opportunity,
As fitting belt to quittance their deceit. Shakespeare.

QUITTER. n. f.

1. A deliverer. Amfworth.

2. Scoria of tin. Amfworth.

QUITTERBONT. n. f. A hard round swelling upon the coronet, between the heel and the quarter, and grows most commonly on the inside of the foot. Farrus's Dict.

QUIVER. n. f. [This word seems to be contracted from couvrir, Fr. to cover.]

A case or sheath for arrows.

As Diuine hunted on a day,
She chanc'd to come where Cupid lay,
His quiver by his head.

One of his shafts she stole away,
And one of hers did close convey
Into the other's hand;

With that love wounded my love's heart,
But Diuine deals with Cupid's dart
Those works, with ease as much he did.

As you would ope and shut your quiver-lid, Chapin.
Diana's nymphs would be array'd in white, their arms and shoulders naked, bows in their hands, and quivers by their sides. Peuchum.

Her sounding quiver on her shoulder ty'd,
One hand a dart, and one a bow supply'd. Dryden.

QUIVER. adj. Nimble; active. Not in use.

There was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus; and he would about and about. Shakespeare.

TO QUIVER. v. n.

1. To quake; to play with a tremulous motion.

The birds chaunt melody on every bush,
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind. Shakespeare.

O'er the pommel cast the knight,
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his rest, and lay for dead. Dryden.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the lambs still quivering on the ground. Addison.

Enrydice with quivering voice he mourn'd,
And Heber's banks Enrydice return'd. Gay.

Dancing sun-beams on the waters play'd,
And verdant alders form'd a quivering shade. Pope.

The lakes that quiver to the curling breeze. Pope.

2. To shiver; to shudder.

Zelmane would have put to her helping hand, but she was taken with such a quivering, that she thought it more wisdom to lean herself to a tree and look on.

QUIVERED. adj. [from quiver.]

1. Furnished with a quiver.

'Tis chastity:
She that has that, is clad in complete steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heath,
Infernal hills, and perilous sandy wilds. Milnes.

2. Sheathed as in a quiver.

From him who se quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster. Pope.
TO QUOIF. v. n. [A low word.] To move as the embryo does in the womb; to move as the heart does when throbbing.
QUODLIBET. n. f. [Lat.] A nice point;
a subtlety.

He who reading on the heart,
When all his quodlibets of art
Could not expound its pulse and beat,
Swore he had never felt it beat. Pope.

QUODLIBETARIAN. n. f. [quodlibet, Lat.]
One who talks or disputes on any subject. Dut.

QUODLIBETICAL. adj. [quodlibet, Lat.]
Not restrained to a particular subject; in the schools, theses or problems, anciently proposed to be debated for curiosity or entertainment, were so called. Dut.

QUOIR. n. f. [coiffe, French.]

1. Any cap with which the head is covered.
See COIF.

Hence thou sickly quoir,
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which princes, flail'd with conquest, aim to be. Shakespeare.

2. The cap of a serjeant at law.

TO QUOIF. v. a. [coiffe, Fr.] to cap, to dress with a headpiece.

She is always quoir'd with the head of an elphant, to shew that this animal is the head of the country. Addison.

QUOIFURE. n. f. [coiffure, Fr.] Headdresses.

The lady in the next medal is very particular her quoirure. Addison.

QUOIL. n. f. See COIL.

QUOIN. n. f. [coin, French.]

1. Corner.

A sudden tempest from the desert flew
With lurid wings, and thunder'd as it blew.
Then winning rounds, the quoina together flew. Southey.

Built brick houses with strong and firm quoina columns at each end. Mortimer.

2. An instrument for raising wall-like engine. Amfworth.

QUOIN. n. f. [coate, Dutch.]

1. Something thrown to a great distance to a certain point.

He plays at quoina well. Shakespeare.
When he played at quoina, he was allowed to breach his and flunk his. Arbuthnot and Fox.

2. The discus of the ancients is sometimes called in English quoina, but improperly;
the game of quoina is a game of skill, the discus was only a trial of strength, as among us to throw the hammer.

TO QUOIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To throw quoina: to play at quoina. Dryden.

ules it to throw the discus. See the noun.

Noble youths for mastership should strive,
To quoina, to run, and deeds and chariot drive. Dryden.

TO QUOIN. v. a. To throw.
Quoina him down, Lardolph, like a shagreen'd shilling. Shakespeare.

QUONDAM. [Latin.] Having been so-merely. A ludicrous word.

This is the quondam king, let's seize upon him.
What lands and lordships for their owner now.
My quondam barber, but his worship now. Dryden.

QUOKE. The preterit of quake. Obsolete.
 Freely up those royal spoils he took,
 Yet at the lion's skin he only quok. Spenser
QUORUM. n. f. [Lat.] A bench of justices; such a number of any officers as is sufficient to do business.
 They were a parcel of nummers, and being him self one of the quorum in his own county, he wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels. Addison QUOTA. n. f. [quotus, Latin.] A share; a proportion as assigned to each.
 Scarce one in this list but engages to supply a quota of brisk young fellows, equipt with hats and feathers. Addison
QUOTATION. n. f. [from quote.]
 1. The act of quoting; citation.
 2. Passage adduced out of an author as evidence or illustration.
 He, that has but ever to little examined the citations of writers, cannot doubt how little credit the quotations deserve, where the originals are wanting. Locke
 He rag'd his tropes, and preach'd up patience, Jack'd his opinion with quotations. Prior
TO QUOTE. v. a. [quotere, Fr.] To cite an author or passage of an author; to adduce by way of authority or illustration the words of another.

 The second chapter to the Romans is here quoted only to paint the margin. Whitgift
 St. Paul quotes one of their poets for this saying. Stillington
 He changed his mind, say the papers, and quote for it Melchior Adams and Holjman. Atterbury
 He quoted texts right upon our Saviour, though he expounded them wrong. Atterbury
 He will, in the middle of a session, quote passages out of Plato and Pindar. Swift
QUOTER. n. f. [from quote.] Citer; he that quotes.
 I proposed this passage entire, to take off the disguise which its quoter put upon it. Atterbury
QUOTH. verb. imperfect. [This is only part of epoëan, Saxon, retained in English, and is now only used in ludicrous language. It is used by Sidney irregularly in the second person.] Quoth I, say I or said I; quoth he, says he or said he.
 Enjoying, quoth you. Sidney Shall we, quoth he, so basely brook
 This paltry strife. Hudibras
QUOTIDIAN. adj. [quotidian, Fr. quoti- dianus, Lat.] Daily; happening every day.

Quotidian things, and equidistant hence Shut in for man in one circumstance. Donne
 Nor was this a short fit of sickness, as an ague, but a quotidian fever, always increasing to higher inflammation. King Charles QUOTIDIAN. n. f. [febris quotidiana, Lat.] A quotidian fever; a fever which returns every day.
 If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love. Shakspeare
QUOTIENT. n. f. [quotient, Fr. quoties, Lat.] In arithmetick, is the number produced by the division of the two given numbers, the one by the other. Cocker
 To make all the steps belonging to the same pair of stairs of an equal height, they count for the height of the room in feet and inches, and multiply the feet by twelve, whole product, with the number of odd inches, gives the total of the whole height in inches, which then they divide by the number of steps they intend to have in that height, and the quotient shall be the number of inches and parts that each step shall be high. Mason

R, is called the canine letter, because it is uttered with some resemblance to the growl or snarl of a cur: it has one constant sound in English, such as it has in other languages; as, red, rust, more, murderick; in words derived from the Greek, it is followed by an h, rhaphisoly; r is never mute unless the second r may be accounted mute, where two rr are used; as myrrh.
TO RABAT. v. n. [rabattre, Fr.] In falconry, to recover a hawk to the fist again. Ainsworth
RABATO. n. f. A neckband; a ruff.
 I think your other rabato were better. Shakspeare
 Brute broad jells upon his narrow neck,
 Pok'd her rabatos, and survey'd her steel. Old Comedy
TO RABBIT. v. a. [rabatre, raboter, Fr.] To pare down pieces of wood so as to fit one another.
 The rabbit plane is to cut part of the upper edge of a board straight or square down, that the edge of another board, cut down in the same manner, may fit into the square of the first; and this lapping over of two boards is called rabbiting. Mason
 The window frame hath every one of its lights rabbeted on its outside about half an inch into the frame, and all these rabbets are grooved square. Mason
RABBIT. n. f. [from the verb.] A joint made by paring two pieces so that they wrap over one another.
 Having drove in the hooks, they set the rabbets of the door within the rabbets of the door-joint. Mason

RABBI. n. f. A doctor among the Jews.
 Be not ye called rabbis; for one is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren. Matthew
 The Hebrew rabbis say, that nature hath given man, for the pronouncing of all letters, the lips, the teeth, the tongue, the palate and throat. Camden's Remains RABBIT. n. f. [rabbe, rabbekin, Dut.] A furry animal that lives on plants, and burrows in the ground.
 I knew a wench married, as she went to the garden for partly to stull a rabbit. Shakspeare
 A company of scholars, going to catch conies, carried one with them which had not much wit, and gave in charge, that if he saw any, he should be sent for fear of fear up of them; but he no sooner espied a company of rabbits, but he cried aloud, ecce multi conies; which he had no sooner said, but the conies ran to their burrows; and he being checked by them for it, answered, Who would have thought that the rabbits understood Latin? Bacon
RABBIE. n. f. [rabula, Latin; rabulari, low Latin.] A tumultuous crowd; an assembly of low people.
 Countrymen, will ye relent, and yield to morey, Or let a rabbie lead you to your devil's? Shakspeare
 Go bring the rabbie here to this place. Shakspeare
 Of these his several rampments, betrayings, and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables, and all that rabbie of Grecian forgeries. Raleigh
 The better sort shuns searfulness, And often censures what the rabbie like. Roscommon
 That produce, æthetical, epicurean rabbie, whom the whole nation fixings of, are not the wisest men in the world. South
 To gratify the barbarous audience, I gave them a short rabbie scene, because the mob are represented

 His enemies have been only able to make impressions upon the low and ignorant rabbie, and to put the dregs of the people in a ferment. Addison RABBLEMENT. n. f. [from rabble.] Crowd; tumultuous assembly of mean people.
 Not in use.
 A rude rabblement,
 Whose like he never saw, he durst not bide,
 But got his ready fied, and tust away 'gainst side. Spenser
 The rabblement shouted, clapp'd their chop hands, and uttered a deal of humming breath. Shakspeare
 There will be always tyrants, murderers, thieves, traitors, and others of the same rabblement. Camden
RABID. adj. [rabidus, Lat.] Fierce; furious; mad.
RABINER. n. f. A kind of smaller ordinance. Ainsworth
RACE. n. f. [race, Fr. from radice, Lat.]
 1. A family ascending.
 2. Family descending.
 He in a moon will create
 Another world; out of man, a new race.
 Of men innumerable, there to dwell. Milton
 Male he created thee, but thy consort
 Female for race. Milton
 High as the mother of the gods in place,
 And proud like her of an immortal race. Dryden
 Hence the long race of African thence come. Dryden
 3. A generation; a collective family.
 A race of youthful and unhandled coits,
 Fetching mad boys. Shakspeare
 4. A particular breed.

The race of moles, fit for the plough is bred.

Chapman.

Infract

Of spirits malign, & better rage to bring Into their vacant room.

Milton.

In the races of mankind and families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to have the right of inheritance.

Locke.

If they are all debarr'd and willing slaves,
The young but breathing to grow grey in bondage,
And the old sinking to ignoble graves,
Of such a race no matter who is king.

Murphy.

5. RACK of ginger. [rayz de gengibre, Spanish.] A root or sprig of ginger.

6. A particular strength or taste of wine, applied by Temple to any extraordinary natural force of intellect.

Of gardens there may be forms wholly irregular, that may have more beauty than of others, but they must owe it to some extraordinary dispositions of nature in the soil, or some great race of fertility or judgment in contrivance.

Temple.

7. [ras, Mandick.] Contest in running.

To describe races and games

Milton.

Or tilting furniture.

Stand forth, ye champions who the guntlet wield,
Or you the swiftest racers of the field;
Stand forth, ye wrestlers who these pastimes grace,
I wield the guntlet, and I run the race.

Pope.

8. Course on the feet.

The flight of many birds is swifter than the race of any beasts.

Bacon.

9. Progress; course.

It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which many examples have taught them, never flout his success till it came to a headlong overthrow.

Sidney.

My race of glory run, and race of shame.

Milt.

The great light of day yet wants to run
Much of his race though sleep.

Milton.

He safe return'd, the race of glory past,
Now to his friends embrace.

Pope.

10. Train; process.

An offensive war is made, which is unjust in the aggressor; the prosecution and race of the war carries the defendant to invade the ancient patrimony of the first aggressor, who is now turned defendant; shall he sit down, and not put himself in defence?

Bacon.

The race of this war fell upon the loss of Ubin, which he re-obtained.

Bacon.

RACEHORSE. n. f. [race and horse.] Horse bred to run for prizes.

The reason Hudibras gives, why those, who can talk on trifles, speak with the greatest fluency, is, that the tongue is like a race horse, which runs the faster the less weight it carries.

Adelphi.

RACEMAT'ION. n. f. [racemus, Latin.] Cluster, like that of grapes.

A cock will in one day fertilize the whole racemat'ion or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks after.

Brown.

RACEM'IFEROUS. adj. [racemus and fero, Lat.] Bearing clusters.

RACE. n. f. [from race.] Runner; one that contends in speed.

His stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;

So the dull eel moves mumber in the mud,
Than all the swift-hun'd races of the flood.

Dorset.

A poet's form the plac'd before their eyes,
And had the nimblest racer seize the prize.

Pope.

RACINESS. n. f. [from racy.] The quality of being racy.

1. An engine to torture.

Vex not his ghost; O let him pass! he hates him
That would, upon the rack of this rough world,

Stretch him out longer.

Shakespeare.

Did ever any man upon the rack a part himself,
Because he had received a cross, answer from his mistress?

Taylor.

Let them feel the whip, the sword, the fire,
And in the tortures of the rack expire.

Addison.

2. Torture; extreme pain.

A fit of the stone puts a king to the rack, and makes him as miserable as it does the meanest subject.

Temple.

A cool behaviour sets him on the rack, and is interpreted as an instance of aversion or indifference.

Addison.

3. Any instrument by which extension is performed.

These bows, being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender or rack that are used by others.

Warton.

4. A distaff; commonly a portable distaff, from which they spin by twirling a ball.

It is commonly spoken and written rack.

The fibres turn the wheel,
Empty the woolly rack, and fill the reel.

Dryden.

5. [racke, Dutch, a track.] The clouds as they are driven by the wind.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dissolves, and makes it indistinct

As water is in water.

Shakespeare.

The great globe itself,
Yea, all, which it inherit, shall dissolve;

And, like this insubstantial pageant, faded,
Leave not a rack behind.

Shakespeare.

We often see against some storm,
A silence in the heav'n's, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death.

Shakespeare.

The winds in the upper region, which move the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are not perceived below, pass without noise.

Bacon.

As wint'ry winds contending in the sky,
With equal force of lungs their titles try;

They race, they roar: the doubtful rack of heav'n
Stands without motion, and the tide undriv'n

Dryden.

6. [hynacca, the occiput, Saxon; racca, Mandick, hinges or joints.] A neck of mutton cut for the table.

7. A grate; the grate on which bacon is laid.

8. A wooden grate in which hay is placed for cattle.

Their bulls they feed to pastures far,
Or bulls, or feed them at full racks within.

The best way to feed cattle with it, is to put it in racks, because of the great quantity they tread down.

Mortimer.

He bid the nimble hours
Bring forth the floods; the nimble hours obey:

From their tall racks the gen'rous floods retire.

Ald.

9. Arrack; a spirituous liquor. See ARRACK.

TO RACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To stream as clouds before the wind.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,
Not separated with the racking clouds,
But bound in a pale clear-flaming sky.

TO RACK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To torment by the rack.

Unhappy man like tortured me,
Their joints new set to be new rack'd again.

Hold, O dreadful sir,
You will not rack an innocent old man.

TO RACK. v. a. [from the noun.]

2. To torment; to harass.

The apostate angel, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair.

TO RACK. v. a. [from the noun.]

3. To harass by exaction.

The landlords there shamefully rack their tenants, exacting of them, besides his covenants, what he pleareth.

The commons had then rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions.

He took possession of his just estate,
Not rack'd his tenants with increase of rent.

TO RACK. v. a. [from the noun.]

4. To scrow; to force to performance.

They racking and stretching scripture further than by God was meant, are drawn intoundry inconveniences.

The wisest among the heathens rack'd their wits, and cast about every way, managing every little argument to the utmost advantage.

It was worth the while for the adversary to rack invention, and to call in all the weapons of learning and critical skill to assail them, if possible, and to wrest them out of our hands.

Waterland.

5. To stretch; to extend.

Nor have I money nor commodity

To raise a present sum;

Try what my credit can in Venice do,
That shall be rack'd even to the uttermost.

6. To defecate; to draw off from the lees.

I know not whence this word is derived in this sense; rein, German, is clear, pure, whence our word to rinse: this is perhaps of the same race.

It is common to draw wine or beer from the lees, which we call racking, whereby it will clarify and sooner.

Some toll their cask about the cellar to rack with the lees, and, after a few days rest, rack it off.

RACK-RENT. n. f. [rack and rent.] Rent raised to the uttermost.

Have poor families been ruined by rack-rent, paid for the lands of the church?

RACK-RENT. n. f. [rack and rent.]

One who pays the uttermost rent.

Though this be a quarter of his yearly income, and the public tax takes away one hundred; yet
this influences not the yearly rent of the land, which the rack-renter or undertaker pays.

RACK-RENT. n. f. [Of uncertain derivation; Cassanbon derives it, after his custom, from racx, the dash of fluctuation against the shore.]

1. An irregular clattering noise.

That the tennis court keeper knows better than I, it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keep'st us racket there.

2. A confused talk. In burlesque language, Ambition hath removed her lodging, and now the next door to faction, where they keep much racket, that the whole parish is disturbed and even night in an uproar.

3. [raquette, Fr.] The instrument with which players at tennis strike the ball.
Whence perhaps all the other senses.

When we have murther our rackets to their talk,
We will in Flanders play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.

The body, into which impression is made, cannot yield backward or it cannot; if it can yield backward, then the impression made is a motion, as we see a stroke with a racket upon a ball, make it fly from it.

He talks much of the motives to do and to forbear, how they determine a reasonable man, as the vent
no more than a tennis ball, to be tossed to and fro by the rackets of the second cause.

RACKING. n. f.

Racking pace of a horse is the same as an amble, only that it is a swifter time and a shorter tread;
and though it does not rid so much ground, yet it is something easier.

RACKING. n. f.

The rackoon is a New England animal, like a badger, having a tail like a fox, being clothed with a thick and deep fur: it sleeps in the day time in a hollow tree, and goes out at nights, when the moon shines, to feed on the sea side, where it is hunted by dogs.

RACEY. adj. [perhaps from rayz, Spanish, a root.] Strong; flavoured; tasting of the soil.

Rich racey verses in which we
The soil, from which they come, taste, smell, and feel.

From his brain that Helicon distil,
Whose racey liquor did his offspring fill.

The cyder at first is very officious, but if ground more early, it is more racey.

RAD. The old pret. of read.

RA'DDOCK, or ruddock. n. f. A bird; the redbreast.

The ruddock would,
With charitable bill, bring thee all this. Shaksp.

RA'DIANCÉ. } n. f. [radiare, Lat.] Spark.
RA'DIANCY. } ling lustre; glitter.

By the sacred radiance of the sun,
By all the operations of the orbs,
Here I discuss all my paternal care, Shakspere.
Whether there be not too high an apprehension above its natural radiance, is not without just doubt, however it be granted a very splendid gem, and whose sparkles may somewhat resemble the glances of fire. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The Son
Gut with omnipotence, with radiance crown'd
Of majesty divine. Milton.

A glory surpassing the sun in its greatest radiance Barret.

RA'DIANT. adj. [radians, Lat.] Shining;
brightly sparkling; emitting rays.

There was a sun of gold radiant upon the top,
and before, a small cherub of gold with wings displayed. Bacon.

Mark what radiant state she spreads,
In circle round her shining throne,
Shooting her beams like silver threads,
Thus, this is the alone. Milton's Arcades.

Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton.

See the warlike host of heaven,
Radiant in glittering arms and beamy pride,
Go forth to succour truth below. Milton.

To RADIATE. v. n. [radio, Latin.] To emit rays; to shine; to sparkle.

though with wit and parts their possessors could revenge God to send forth his light and his truth, yet now that revelation hath disclosed them, and that he hath been pleased to make them radiate his word, men may recollect those scatter'd divine beams, and kindling with them the topics proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.

Light radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes, and thus we see the sun or a flame; or it is reflected from other bodies, and thus we see a man or a picture. Locke.

RADIANT. adj. [radius, Lat.] Adorned with rays.

The radiant head of the phoenix gives us the meaning of a passage in Antoinis. Addison.

RADIATION. n. f. [radiatio, Lat. radia- tio, Fr.]

1. Beamy lustre; emission of rays.

We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations, and of all colours. Bacon.

Should I say I liv'd darker than were true,
Your radiation can all clouds subdue,
But one; 'tis best light to contemplate you. Donne.

2. Emission from a centre every way.

Sound parallel in many things with the light,
and radiation of things visible. Bacon.

RADICAL. adj. [radical, Fr. from radix,

1. Primitive; original.

The differences, which are secondary, and proceed from these radical differences, are; plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not. Bacon.

Such a radical truth, that God is, springing up together with the essence of the soul, and previous to all other thoughts, is not pretended to by philosophy. Bentley.

Implanted by nature.

The emission of the loose and adventitious moisture doth betray the radical moisture, and carries the company. Bacon.

VOL. II.

R A F

If the radical moisture of gold were separated, it might be contrived to burn without being consumed. Wilkins.

The sun beams render the humours hot, and dry up the radical moisture. Arbutnot.

3. Serving to origination.

RADICALITY. n. f. [from radical.] Ori- gination.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms, thus, in the seeds of wheat, there both obscurely the femininity of darnel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RADICALLY. adv. [from radical.] Ori- ginally; primitively.

It is no easy matter to determine the point of death in insects, who have not their vitalities radically confined into one part. Brown.

These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive forms, and origins of light
Enliven worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.

RADICALNESS. n. f. [from radical.] The state of being radical.

To RADICATE. v. a. [radicatus, from radix, Lat.] To root; to plant deeply and firmly.

Meditation will radicate these seeds, fix the transient gleam of light and warmth, confirm religious of good, and give them a durable consistence in the soul. Hammond.

Nor have we let fall our pen upon discouragement of unbelief, from radicating beliefs, and points of high prescription. Brown.

If the object stays not on the sense, it makes not impression enough to be remembered; but if it be repeated there, it leaves plenty enough of those images behind it, to strengthen the knowledge of the object: in which radicating knowledge, if the memory consist, there would be no need of referring those atoms in the brain. Glanville.

RADICATION. n. f. [radication, Fr. from radicate.] The act of taking root and fixing deep.

They that were to plant a church, were to deal with men of various inclinations, and of different habits of sin, and degrees of radication of those habits; and to reach of these some proper application was to be made to cure their souls. Hammond.

RADICLE. n. f. [radicule, Fr. from radix,
Lat.] That part of the seed of a plant, which, upon its vegetation, becomes its root. Quincy.

RADISH. n. f. [radic, Saxon; radis, ra- fion, Fr. raphanus, Lat.] A root commonly eaten raw. Miller.

2. A bone of the fore arm, which accompanies the ulna from the elbow to the wrist.

To RAFF. v. a. To sweep; to huddle; to take hastily without distinction.

Their causes and effects I thus raff up together. Carriv.

To RAFFLE. v. n. [raffle, to snatch, Fr.]
To cast dice for a prize, for which every one lays down a stake.

Letters from Hampstead give me an account, there is a late indutition there, under the name of a raffling shop. Tatler.

RAFFLE. n. f. [raffe, Fr. from the verb.]
A species of game or lottery, in which many stake a small part of the value of some single thing, in consideration of a chance to gain it.

The toy, brought to Rome in the third triumph of Pompey, being a pair of tables for gaming, made of two precious stones, three foot broad, and four foot long, would have made a fine raffle.
Arbutnot on Coins.

And forms a raft and build the rising ship. Pope.

RAFT. part. pass. of reave or raff. Spenser.
Torn; rent.

RAFTER. n. f. [rafter, Saxon; rafter, Dutch; corrupted, says Junius, from roof tree.] The secondary timbers of the house; the timbers which are let into the great beam.

The rafters of my body, bone,
Being full with you, the muscle, sinew, and vein,
Which tile this house, will come again. Deane.

I trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,
Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in top'ry halls. Milton.

On them the Trojans call Stones, rafters, pillars, beams. Denham.

By Darius, king of Egypt, when he fled from his brother Bemides, the use of shipping was first brought among the Greeks, who before that time knew no other way of rolling their narrow boats, but on beams or rafters tied to one another. Heylin.

From the East, a Belgian wind
His hostile breath through the dry rafters sent;
The flames impell'd. Dryden.

The roof began to mount aloft,
Aloft rose every beam and rafter,
The heavy wall chn'd slowly after. Swift.

RAFTERED. adj. [from rafter.] Built with rafters.

No rafter'd roofs with dance and labor forming,
No room tide bell invites the country round. Pope.

RAG. n. f. [hpacobe, torn, Sax. rago.]

1. A piece of cloth torn from the rest; a tatter.

Cowls, hoods, and habits, with their wearers tost,
And flutter'd into rags. Milton.

Rags are a great improvement of chunky land.
Mostiner.

2. Any thing rent and tattered; worn out clothes: proverbially, mean drest.

Fathers that wear rags,
Do make their children blind;

But fathers that bear bags,
Shall be their children kind. Shakspere.

They took from me
Both coat and cloak, and all things that might be Grace in my habit; and in place, put on These tatter'd rags. Chapman.

Worn like a cloth,
Gnawn into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.

Content with poverty, my foul I am;
And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm. Dryden.

3. A fragment of drest.

He had first matter seen undrest;
He took her naked all alone,

Before one rag of loam was on. Hudibras.

RAGAMUFFIN. n. f. [from rag and I know not what else.] A paltry mean fellow.

I have led my ragamuffins where they were per-per'd; there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end to beg during life. Shakspere.

Shall we brook that paltry as
And feeble leaunched, Hudibras.

With that more paltry ragamuffin,
Ralpho, vapouring and hallooing? Hudibras.

Attended with a crew of ragamuffins, she broke into his house, turned all things topsy-turvy, and then set it on fire. Swift.

RAGE. n. f. [rage, French.]

1. Violent anger; vehement fury.

This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The horn of minkam'd swiftness, will, too late,
The leaden pounds to's heels. Shakspere.

Desire not
To ally my rages and revenges with Your colder reason. Shakspere.

RAG

Argument more heroic than the rage
Of Turnus for Lavinia dispossess'd. Milton.
Torment and loud lament and furious rage. Milt.

2. Vehemence or exacerbation of any thing painful.

The party hurt, who hath been in great rage of pain, till the weapon was re-anointed. Bacon.
The rage of thirst and hunger now suppress'd. Pope.

3. Enthusiasm; rapture.

Who brought green poetry to her perfect age,
And made that art which was a rage. Cooley.

4. Eagerness; vehemence of mind: as, a rage of money getting.

You purchase pain with all that joy can give,
And die of nothing but a rage to live. Pope.

Then may his soul its tre-born rage enjoy,
Give due to will, and every power employ. Harte.

To RAGE, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be in fury; to be heated with excessive anger.

Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby, is not wise. Proverbs.
Why do the heathen rage? Psalm.

At this heinously rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Snote him into the midriff. Milton.

2. To ravage; to exercise fury.

Heart-rending news,
That death should be a case have to rage among
The fair, the wife, the virtuous. Waller.

3. To act with mischievous impetuosity.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another, as if they were run like the lightnings. Nahum.

The maddening wheels of brazen chariots rag'd
Milton.

After these waters had rag'd on the earth, they began to lessen and shrink, and the great fluctuations of this deep being quieted by degrees, the waters retired. Barnet.

RA'GENT, adj. [rage and full.] Furious;
violent.

This courtesy was worse than a basinado to Zelmire, to that again with rag'd eyes he had him defend himself; for no less than his life would suffer it. Salady.

A popular orator may represent vices in so un-dignified appearances, and set out each virtue in so amiable a form, that the covetous person shall scatter most liberally his beloved idol, wealth, and the rag'd person shall find a calm. Hammond.

RA'GGER, adj. [from rag.]

1. Rent into tatters.

How like a prodigal,
The scarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind;
How like the prodigal doth she return
With over-weather'd ribs and rag'd sails,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the trumpet wind. Shakespeare.

A-I go in this rag'd battered coat, I am hunted away from the old woman's door by every barking
cur. As You Like It.

2. Uneven; consisting of parts almost divided.

The curl of Warwick's rag'd staff is yet to be seen pourtrayed in their church steeple. Carew.
That same whirlwind hear Unto a rag'd, fearful, hanging rock,
And throw it thence into the raging sea. Shakespeare.

The moon appears, when looked upon with a good glass, rude and rag'd. Barnet.

3. Dressed in tatters.

Since noble arts in Rome have no support,
And rag'd virtue not a friend at court. Dryden.

4. Ragged; not smooth.

The wolf would barter away a rag'd coat and a raw-boned carcass, for a smooth fat one. L'Estrange.

What shepherd owns those rag'd sheep? Dryden.

RA'GGENESS, n. f. [from rag'd.] State of being dressed in tatters.

Poor naked wretches, where'er you are,
That hide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your boniless heads and naked sides,
Your loop'd and widow'd rag'dness defend you?
Shakespeare.

RAI

RA'INGLY, adv. [from raging.] With vehement fury.

RA'GMAN, n. f. [rag and man.] One who deals in rags.

RAGOUT, n. f. [Fr.] Meat stewed and highly seasoned.

To the stage permit
Ragouts for Terens or Thyestes dress,
'Tis talk enough for thee 't expose a Roman feast. Dryden.

No fish they reckon comparable to a ragout of sausages. Addison.

When art and nature join, th' effect will be
Some more ragout, or charming fricassée. King's Cookery.

RA'GSTONE, n. f. [rag and stone.]

1. A stone so named from its breaking in a ragged, uncertain, irregular manner.

Woodward on Fossils.

2. The stone with which they smooth the edge of a tool new ground and left ragged.

RA'GWORT, n. f. [rag and wort.] A plant.

RAIL, n. f. [rieget, German.]

1. A cross beam fixed at the ends in two upright poles.

If you make another square, and allow a tenant on each intermediate end of the sides, and another mortels on the top and bottom rails, you may put them together. Mason.

2. A series of posts connected with beams by which any thing is enclosed: a pale is a series of small upright posts rising above the cross beam, by which they are connected: a rail is a series of cross beams supported with posts, which do not rise much above it.

A man upon a high place without rails, is ready to fall. Bacon.

A large square table for the commissioners, one side being sufficient for those of either party, and a rail for others which went round. Clarendon.

3. A kind of bird.

Of wild birds Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge and pheasant. Carew.

4. [jangle, Sax.] A woman's upper garment. This is preserved only in the word night rail.

To RAIL, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To enclose with rails.

The hand is square, with four rounds at the corners; this should first have been planched over,
and railed about with ballisters. Carew.

As the churchyard ought to be divided from other profane places, so it ought to be fenced in and railed. Waller.

2. To range in a line.

They were brought to London all railed in ropes, like a team of horses in a cart, and were executed
some at London, and the rest at divers places. Bacon.

To RAIL, v. n. [railer, Fr. raller, Dutch.]

To use insolent and reproachful language;
to speak to, or to mention in opprobrious terms: formerly with on, now commonly with at.

Your husband is in his old lines again; he fo rails against all married mankind, curses all Eve's daughters. Shakespeare.

What a monstrous fellow art thou? thus to rail on one, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee. Shakespeare.

Till thou canst rail the seals from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud. Shakespeare.

He tript me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man, Shakespeare.

Angels bring not railing accusation against thee. 2 Peter.

The plain the forests doth disdain:
The forests rail upon the plain. Dryden.

It any is angry, and rails at it, he may be sure to talk of me the never fails. Dryden.

RAI'LER, n. f. [from rail.] One who insults or defames by opprobrious language.

If I build my felicity upon my reputation, I am as happy as long as the railer will give me leave.
South's Sermons.

Let no presuming impious railer tax
Creative wisdom. Thomas.

RAI'LLERY, n. f. [railerie, Fr.] Slight satire; satirical merriment.

Let rallery be without malice or bent. Ben Jon.
A quotation out of Hudibras shall make thee treat with levity an obligation wherein their welfare is concerned as to this world and the next. South's of this nature is enough to make the hearer tremble.
Addison.

Studies employed on low objects; the every raising of them is sufficient to turn them into rallery.
Addison.

To these we are solicited by the arguments of subtle, and the ralleries of the prophane. South.

RAYMENT, n. f. [for arrament, from array.] Vesture; vestiment; dress; garment. A word now little used but in poetry.

His raiments, though mean, received handsoms by the grace of the wearer. South.

O Protheus, let this habit make the blush!
Be thou abash'd, that I have took upon me
Such an unmanly raiment. Shakespeare.

Living, both food and raiment she supplies thee
You are to consider them as the servants and instruments of action, and so give them both a rest, and raiment, that they may be brought headlong to do the duties of a charitable, not pious life. South.

To RAIN, v. n. [nenian, Sax. regnen,
Dutch.]

1. To fall in drops from the clouds.

Like a low-hung cloud, it rains so fast,
That all at once it falls. Dryden.

The wind is south-west, and the weather ring, and like to rain. South.

2. To fall as rain.

The eye marvelleth at the whiteness thereof,
the heart is astonish'd at the raining of it. South.

They put them down to weep; nor only tears Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds rote whom at.

3. It RAINS. The water falls from the clouds.

That which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack when it begins to rain, Shakespeare.

And leave thee in the storm. Shakespeare.

To RAIN, v. a. To pour down as rain.

It rain'd down fortune, flowing on your head
Rain sacrificial whipsprings in his cur,
Make sacred even his flurp. Shakespeare.

Israel here had saunth'd, had not God
Rain'd from heav'n manna. South.

RAIN, n. f. [nen, Saxon.] The moisture that falls from the clouds.

When shall we three meet again,
In thunder, lightning, or in rain? Shakespeare.

With strange rains, hails, and showers were persecuted. South.

The lost clouds pour
Into the sea an infinite shower,
And the vast sailors curse the rain, South.

For which poor farmers pray'd in vain.
Rain is water by the heat of the sun divided very small parts ascending in the air, till cooltering the cold, it is condensed into clouds and descends in drops. South.

RAINBOW. n. f. [rain and bow.] The iris; the semicircle of various colours which appears in showery weather.

Calling of the water in a most cunning manner, makes a perfect rainbow, not more pleasant to the eye than to the mind, so sensibly to feel the proof of the heavenly iris. Sidney.

To add another hue unto the rainbow. Shaksp. The rainbow is drawn like a nymph with large eyes, a dispend in the form of a semicircle, the features of tawdry colours. Peacham.

They could not be ignorant of the promise of God never to drown the world, and the rainbow before their eyes to put them in mind of it. Brown.

This rainbow never appears but where it rains in the sun time, and may be made artificially by spouting water, which may break aloft, and scatter in drops, and fall down like rain; for the sun, shining upon these drops, certainly causes the bow to appear to a spectator standing in a true position to the rain and sun: this bow is made by refraction of the sun's light in drops of falling rain. Newton.

The dome's high arch reflects the mingled blaze, And forms a rainbow of alternate rays. Pope.

Guy rainbow filks her mellow charms in fold, And thought of Lyce but herself is old. Young.

RAINDOER. n. f. [branar, Sax. rangifer, Lat.] A deer with large horns, which, in the northern regions, draws sledges through the snow.

RAINSINESS. n. f. [from rainy.] The state of being showery.

RAIN-WATER. n. f. [rain and water.] Water not taken from springs, but falling from the clouds.

Court holy water in a dry house, is better than the rain-water out of doors. Shaksp.

We took distill'd rain-water. Boyle.

Rain-water is to be preferred before spring-water. Mortimer.

RAINY. adj. [from rain.] Showery; wet.

Our gaynets and our gilt are all besmirch'd, With rainy marching in the painful field. Shaksp.

A continual dropping in a very rainy day, and a contentious woman, are alike. Proverbs.

TO RAISE. v. a. [refsa, Swedish; reiser, Danish.]

1. To lift; to heave. The elders went to raise him up from the earth. Samuel.

Such a buck as no twelve birds could raise Twelve flourishing birds of these degenerate days. Pope.

2. To set upright; as, he raised a mast. Take his carcase down from the tree, cast it at the entering of the gate, and raise therein a heap of stones. Joshua.

3. To erect; to build up. To exalt to a state more great or illustrious.

Counsellors may manage affairs, which nevertheless are far from the ability to raise and amplify an estate. Bacon.

Thou so pleas'd, Canst raise thy creature to what height thou wilt Or amon. Milton.

4. To amplify; to enlarge. That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh, To raise my fortunes. Shaksp.

5. To increase in current value. The plate pieces of eight were raised three-pence in the piece. Temple.

6. To elevate; to exalt. The Persians gazing on the sun, Admir'd how high 'twas plac'd, how bright it shone; But as his pow'r was known, there thoughts were rais'd, And soon they worshipp'd what at first they prais'd. Prior.

7. To advance; to promote; to prefer. This gentleman came to be raised to great titles. Clarendon.

8. To excite; to put in action.

He raised the stormy wind, He might tempt Th' animal spirits, that from pure blood arise. Milton.

Thence raise discomper'd thoughts. Gods encountering gods, Jove encouraging them with his thunders, and Neptune raising his tempests. Pope.

10. To excite to war or tumult; to stir up. He first rais'd head against usurping Richard. Shaksp.

They neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, nor here to jog up the people. Acts.

11. To raise up the people. Acts. In parts remote to raise the Luscan swains. Dryden.

12. To give beginning of importance to; as, he raised the family. They shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep. Job.

13. To bring into being. One hath ventur'd from the deep to raise New troubles. Milton.

God vouchsafes to raise another world From him. Milton.

14. To call into view from the state of separate spirits. The spirits of the deceased, by certain spells and internal sacrifices, were raised. Sandy's Journey.

These are spirities the understanding raises to itself, to flatter its own laziness. Locke.

15. To bring from death to life. He was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification. Romans.

It is fown in dishonour, it is raised in glory; it is fown in weakness, it is raised in power. 1 Corin.

16. To occasion; to begin. Raise not a false report. Ecclesi.

The common ferryman of Egypt, that walked over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks to be the ferryman of hell, and solemn stories raised after him. Brown.

Wantonness and pride Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace. Milt.

17. To set up; to utter loudly. All gaze, and all admire, and raise a shouting sound. Dryden.

Soon as the prince appears, they raise a cry. Dryden.

18. To collect; to obtain a certain sum. Britain, once despoil'd, can raise As ample sums, as Rome in Cæsar's days. Arbuth.

I should not thus be bound, If I had means, and could but raise five pound. Guy.

19. To collect; to assemble; to levy. He out of small things could without end Have rais'd incessant armies. Milton.

20. To give rise to. Higher argument Remains, sufficient itself to raise That name, unless years damp my wing. Milton.

21. To procure to be bred or propagated; as, he raised sheep; he raised wheat where none grew before.

22. To raise is, in all its senses, to elevate from low to high, from mean to illustrious, from obscure to famous, or to do something that may be by an easy figure referred to local elevation.

23. To raise paste. To form paste into pies without a dish. Miss Liddy can dance a jig, and raise paste. Spectator.

RAISER. n. f. [from raise.] He that raises.

And drinke the dark-deepe water of the spring, Bright Arethusa, the most nourishing Raiser of hearts. Chapman.

Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes. Daniel.

They that are the first raisers of their houses, are most indulgent towards their children. Bacon.

He that boasts of his ancestors, the founders and raisers of a family, doth confesse that he hath less virtue. Taylor.

Raiser of human kind! by nature call'd. Thomson.

RAISIN. n. f. [racemus, Lat. rajin, Fr.]

Raisins are the fruit of the vine suffered to remain on the tree till perfectly ripened, and then dried: grapes of every kind, preferred in this manner, are called raisins, but those dried in the sun are much sweeter and pleasanter than those dried in ovens; they are called jar raisins, from their being imported in earthen jars. Hill's Mat. Med.

Dried grapes or raisins, boiled in a convenient proportion of water, make a sweet liquor, which being sometimes distilled, affords an oil and spirit much like the raisins themselves. Boyle.

RAKE. n. f. [rastrum, Lat. pace, Saxon; rathe, Dutch.]

1. An instrument with teeth, by which the ground is divided, or light bodies are gathered up.

At midnight down with the brembles and braks, And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes. Tupper.

O that thy housewifely deity would please To guide my rake upon the clinking sound Of some vast treasure hidden under ground. Dryden.

He examines his face in the stream, combs his ruffled locks with a rake. Garth.

2. [racaille, Fr. the low rabble; or rekel, Dut. a worthless cur dog.] A loose, disorderly, vicious, wild, gay, thoughtless fellow; a man addicted to pleasure.

The next came with her son, who was the greatest rake in the place, but so much the mother's darling, that she left her husband for the sake of this graceless youth. Addison.

Rakes hate sober grave gentlewomen. Atterbury.

Men, come to business, come to pleasure take, But every woman is at heart a rake. Pope.

The first law finding his own virtues wake; The mother begg'd the blessing of a rake. Pope.

To dance at public places, that tops and rakes might admire the fineness of her shape, and the beauty of her motions. Law.

TO RAKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gather with a rake. Now barbe, and rake it, and set it on cocks. Tuff.

Harrows iron teeth shall every where Rake helmets up. May's Virgil's Georgicks.

If it be such a precious jewel as the world takes it for, yet they are forced to rake it out of dang-bills; and accordingly the apostle gives it a value suitable to its extract. South.

2. To clear with a rake. As they rake the green appearing ground, The rafter has cock eyed. Thomson.

3. To draw together by violence. An eager desire to rake together whatsoever might prejudice or any way hinder the credit of apocryphal books, hath caused the collectors pen to run as it were on wheels, that the mind, which should guide it, had no leisure to think. Hooker.

What pile of wealth hath he accumulated! How, 't' th' name of this, Does he rake this together? Shaksp.

A sport more formidable Had rak'd together village rabble. Hudibras.

Ill-gotten goods are soon order'd away with as little confidence as they were raked together. L'Estrange.

4. To scour; to search with eager and vehement diligence. The watchman rakes the town to find a plot. Swift.

5. To heap together and cover. To rake the fire is still used. Here 't' th' lands There I'll rake up the post unanctified Of murtherous lectures. Shaksp.

The blazing wood may to the eye seem great, But 't' the fire rak'd up that has the heat, And keeps it long. Suckling.

To RAKE, v. n.

1. To search; to grope. It has always an idea of coarseness or noisomeness.

If you hide the crown
Ev'n in your hearts, there will he rake for it.

It is as offensive, as to rake into a dung-hill.

Another finds the way to dye in grain;
Or for the golden ore in rivers rakes,

Then melts the mails

One is for raking in Chaucer for antiquated words, which are never to be revived, but when found or significance is wanting

After having made essays into it, as they do for coal in England, they rake into the most promising parts.

2. To pass with violence.

When Pas had reached him to take,

The fox on knees and elbows tumbled down:

Pas could not stay, but over him did rake,

And crown'd the earth with his fist touching crown.

The Belgians tack upon our coast,

And raking chate-guns throughout ferns they find

RA'KER, n. f. [from rake.] One that rakes.

RA'KEHELL, n. f. [Of this word the etymology is doubtful; as it is now written, it is apparently derived from rake and hell, and may aptly represent a wretch whose life is passed in places of lewdness and wickedness: Skinner derives it from racaille, French, the rabble; Junius, from rekel, Dutch, a mongrel dog.] A wild, worthless, dissolute, debauched, forry fellow.

Out of the fire of these rakehell horse boys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kera supplid.

The king, when he heard of Perkins's siege of Exeter, said in sport, that the king of rakehells was landed in the West, and that he hoped now to see him.

A rakehell of the town, whose character is set off with excessive prodigality, prophaneity, intemperance, and lust, is rewarded with a lady of great fortune to repair his own, which his vices had almost ruined.

RA'KEHELLY, adj. [from rakehell.] Wild;

dissolute.

I scorn the rakehell rout of our ragged rhimers, which without learning boast, without judgment

jangle, and without reason rage and foam.

No breaking of windows or glasses for sport,

And spoiling the goods for a rakehell prank

RA'KISH, adj. [from rake.] Loose; lewd;

dissolute.

There seldom can be peculiarity in the love of a

rakish heart.

To RA'LLY, v. a. [rallier, French.]

1. To put disordered or dispersed forces into order.

With rallied arms to try what may be yet

Regain'd in heav'n.

Publick arguing serves to wet the wits of hereticks, and by shewing weak parts of their doctrines, prompts them to rally all their sophistry to fortify them with fallacy.

Luther deters men from solitariness; but he does not mean from a sober solitude, that rallies our scattered strengths, and prepares us against any new encounters from without.

2. [rallier, French.] To treat with slight contempt; to treat with satirical merriment.

Houeycomb has not lived a month, for these forty years, out of the smoke of London, and rallies me upon a country life.

If after the reading of this letter, you find yourself in a humour rather to rally and ridicule, than to comfort me, I desire you would throw it into

Strephon had long confest'd his saddest pain,
Which gay Corinna rally'd with disdain.

To RA'LLY, v. n.

1. To come together in a hurry.

If God should give this perverse man a new heaven and a new earth, springing out of nothing

he might say, that innumerable parts of matter chanced just then to rally together, and to form themselves into this new world.

2. To come again into order.

The Grecians rally, and their pow'rs unite;

With fury charge us.

3. To exercise satirical merriment.

RAM, n. f. [nam, Saxon; ram, Dutch.]

1. A male sheep; in some provinces, a tup.

The ewes, being rank, turned to the rams.

An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram tender.

Much like a well grown bel-weather or felted ram he flows.

You may draw the bones of a ram's head hung with strings of beads and ribbands.

A ram their off-rung, and a ram their meat.

2. Aries, the vernal sign.

The ram having paid the sea, serenely shines,

And leads the year.

3. An instrument with an iron head to batter walls.

Let not the piece of virtue,

Which is set as the cement of our love,

To keep it huddled, be the ram to batter

The fortress of it.

Judas calling upon the Lord, who without any rams or engines of war did call down Jericho, gave a fierce assault against the walls.

To RAM, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive with violence, as with a battering ram.

Ram thou thy faithful tidings in mine ears,

That long time have been barren.

Having no artillery nor engines, and finding that he could do no good by ramming with logs of timber, he let one of the gates on fire.

The charge with bullet, or paper wet and hard stopped, or with powder alone rammed in hard, maketh no great difference in the loudness of the report.

Here many poor people roll in vast balls of snow, which they ram together, and cover from the sunshine

2. To fill with any thing driven hard together.

As when that devilish iron engine wrought

In deepest hell, and tram'd by fury's skull,

With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,

And ram'd with bullet round ordain'd to kill.

He that proves the king,

To him will we prove loyal; till that time,

Have we ram'd up our gates against the world.

They mind the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth, but the citizens made a countermine.

This into hollow engines, long and round,

Thick ram'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire

Diluted and intimate, shall send forth

Such implements of mischief, as shall dash

To pieces.

A ditch drawn between two parallel furrows, was filled with some found materials, and rammed to make the foundation solid.

RAMAGE, n. f. [from ramus, Latin.]

Branches of trees.

To RA'MAGE, v. a. See To RUMMAGE.

To RA'MBLE, v. n. [rammelen, Dutch, to rove loosely in lust; ramb, Swedish, to rove.

To rove loosely and irregularly;

to wander.

Shame contracts the spirits, fixes the ramblings of fancy, and gathers the man into himself.

He that is at liberty to ramble in perfect darkness, what is his liberty better than if driven up and down as a bubble by the wind?

Chapman has taken advantage of an immeasurable length of verse, notwithstanding which, there is scarce any paraphrase so loose and rambling as his.

Never ask leave to go abroad, for you will be thought an idle rambling fellow.

Or his ample sides the rambling sprays

Luxuriant shoot.

RA'MBLE, n. f. [from the verb.] Wandering; irregular excursion.

This conceit puts us upon the ramble up and down for relief, till very weariness brings us at last to ourselves.

Coming home after a short Christmas ramble, I found a letter upon my table.

She quits the narrow path of sense

For a dear ramble through impertinence.

RA'MBLER, n. f. [from ramble.] Rover;

wanderer.

Says the rambler, we must e'en beat it out

RA'MBOOZE, } n. f. A drink made of

RA'MBUSF, } wine, ale, eggs, and ta-gur, in the winter time; or of wine,

milk, sugar, and rosewater, in the summer time.

1. To affect with rapture; to strike with ecstacy; to hurry out of himself.

These are speeches of men, not comforted with the hope of that they desire, but rapped with admiration at the view of enjoyed bliss. Hooker.

Beholding the face of God, in admiration of so great excellency, they all adore him; and being rapt with the love of his beauty, they cleave inseparably for ever unto him. Hooker.

What thus raps you? are you well? Shakespeare.

The government I cut upon my brother, And to my state grew stranger, being transported And rapt in secret studies. Shakespeare.

You're rapt in some work, some dedication. Shakespeare.

Circled me With all their welcomes, and as cheerfully Disposed their rapt minds, as if there they saw Their naturall countrie. Chapman.

R A P

The rocks that did more high their foreheads raise

To his rapt eye. Chapman.

I'm rapt with joy to see my Marcia's tears. Addison.

It is impossible duly to consider these things without being rapt into admiration of the infinite wisdom of the divine architect. Chryse.

Rapt into future times, the bard begun, A virgin shall conceive, a virgin bear a son! Pope.

Let heav'n force it, all at once 'tis he'd, Not touch'd, but rapt; not waken'd, but inspir'd. Pope.

2. To snatch away.

He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain, And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen, With fire not made to burn, but fury for to thyme. Spenser.

Underneath a bright sea flow'd Of palper, or of liquid pearl, whereon Who after came from earth, taking arriv'd Waved by angels, or flew o'er the lake Rapt in a char of drawn by fiery steeds. Milton.

Standing on earth, not to above the pole. Milton.

3. To seize by violence.

Addison. Four, the king of Manbrant, rap'd Fair John, his dear to. Dryden.

4. To exchange; to truck. A low word.

To RAP and REAP. [more properly rap and ran; rapian, Saxon, to bind, and rant, Icelandic, to plunder.] To seize by violence.

Thou husbanda robb'd, and made hard shifts To administer unto their guts All they could rap and reap and pilfer, To traps and cads of gold and silver. Hudibras.

RAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A quick smart blow.

How comest thou to go with thy arm tied up? has old Lewis given thee a rap over thy fingers? Arbutnot.

RAPACIOUS. adj. [rapace, French; rapax, Latin.] Given to plunder; seizing by violence.

Well may thy lord, appeas'd, Redeem thee quite from death's rapacious claim. Milton.

Shall this price, Soon brighten'd by the diamond's circling rays, On that rapacious hand for ever blaze? Pope.

RAPACIOUSLY. adv. [from rapacious.]

By rapine; by violent robbery.

RAPACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from rapacious.]

The quality of being rapacious.

RAPACITY. n. f. [rapacitè, French; rapacitas, from rapax, Latin.] Addictedness to plunder; exercise of plunder; ravenness.

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, rattle them those small remains of ancient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left to the church. Spratt.

RAPT. n. f. [rapt, French; raptus, Lat.]

1. A violent delation of chastity.

You are both deceiver and For villains mark'd with rape. Shakespeare.

It pe call you it, to seize my own, My time I betroth'd love? Shakespeare.

The parliament conceived, that the obtaining of women by force into possession, howsoever afterwards silent might follow by allurements, was but a rape drawn forth in length, because the first force drew on all the rest. Bacon.

Witness that night In Gibeon, when the hospitable door Expos'd a matron to avoid worse rape. Milton.

The haughty fair, Who not the rape even of a god could bear. Dryden.

Tell the Thracian tyrant's alter'd shape, And dire revenge of Philomela's rape. Roscommon.

2. Privation; act of taking away.

Pear grew after pear, Fig after fig came; time made never rape Of any duty there. Chapman.

3. Something snatched away.
Sad widows by thee rised, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphan's of thy rapes complain. Sandys.
Where now are all my hopes? oh never more Shall they revive! nor death her rapes restore!
Sandys.
4. Fruit plucked from the cluster.
The juice of grapes is drawn as well from the rape, or whole grapes plucked from the cluster, and wine pour'd upon them in a vessel, as from a vat, where they are bruised. Ray.
5. A division of the county of Suffex answering to a hundred in other counties.
6. A plant, from the seed of which oil is expressed.

RAPID. adj. [rapide, French; rapidus, Latin.] Quick; swift.

Part from the goal with rapid wheels. Milton.
While you to smoothly turn and rowl our spheres,
That rapid motion does but rest appear. Dryden

RAPIDITY. n. f. [rapidité, French; rapiditas, from rapidus, Latin.] Celerity;
velocity; swiftness.

Where the words are not monosyllables, we make them to by our rapidity of pronunciation.
Spectator

RAPIDLY. adv. [from rapid.] Swiftly; with quick motion.

RAPIDNESS. n. f. [from rapid.] Celerity;
swiftness.

RAPIER. n. f. [rapier, French; so called from the quickness of its motion.] A small sword used only in thrusting.
I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point
Shakespeare

A soldier of far inferior strength may manage a rapier or fire-arms so expertly, as to be an overmatch for his adversary. Pope.

RAPIER-FISH. n. f. The swordfish.
The rapier-fish, called axiphas, grows sometimes to the length of five yards; the sword, which grows level from the front of the fish, is here about a yard long, at the basis four inches over, two-edged, and pointed exactly like a rapier: he preys on fishes, having first stabbed them with this sword. Grew.

RAPINE. n. f. [rapina, Latin; rapine,
French.]

1. The act of plundering.
If the poverty of Scotland might, get the plenty of England cannot, excuse the envy and rapine of the church's rights. H. Charles.
The logick of a conquering sword may silence,
but convince it cannot; its efficacy rather breeds aversion and abhorrence of that religion, whose first address is in blood and rapine. Decay of Piety.
2. Violence; force.

Her least action overaw'd
His malice, and with rapine sweet betray'd
His fierceness of its fierce intent. Milton.

RAPPER. n. f. [from rap.] One who strikes.

RAPPORT. n. f. [rappat, French.] Relation; reference; proportion. A word introduced by the innovator, Temple,
but not copied by others.

Is obvious what rapport there is between the conceptions and language in every country, and how great a difference this must make in the excellence of books. Temple.

TO RAP. v. n. [This word is used by Chapman for rap improperly, as appears from the participle, which from rapt would be not rapt; but rapted.] To ravish; to put in ecstasy.

You may safe approve,
How strong in insatiation to their love
Their raping times are. Odyssey.

RAPT. n. f. [from rap.] A trance; an ecstasy.

RAPTURE. n. f.

1. Violent seizure.

And thicke into our ship, he threw his flash:
That 'gainst a rock, or flat, her keele, did dash
With headlong rapture. Chapman.

2. Ecstasy; transport; violence of any pleasing passion; enthusiasm; uncommon heat of imagination.

Could virtue be seen, it would beget love, and advance it not only into admiration, but rapture.
Holyday.

Musick, when thus applied, raises in the mind of the hearer great conceptions; it strengthens devotion, and advances praise into rapture. Spectator.
You grow correct, that once with rapture wait.
Pope.

3. Rapidity; haste.

The watry throng,
Wave rowling after wave, where way they found,
If sleep, with torrent rapture; if through plain
Soft ebbing; nor withstood them rock or hill.
Milton.

RAPTURED. adj. [from rapture.] Ravished; transported. A bad word.

He drew
Such madd'ning draughts of beauty to the soul,
As for a while cancell'd his raptur'd thought
With luxury too daring. Thomson.

RAPTUROUS. adj. [from rapture.] Ecsta-tick; transporting.

Nor will he be able to forbear a rapturous acknowledge of the infinite wisdom and contrivance of the divine artificer. Blackmore.

Are the pleasures of it so inviting and rapturous?
is a man bound to look out sharp to plague himself?
Collier.

RARE. adj. [rarus, Latin; rare, French; in all the senses but the last.]

1. Scarce; uncommon; not frequent.
Live to be the show and gaze of th' time,
We'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,
Painted upon a pole. Shakespeare.

2. Excellent; incomparable; valuable to a degree seldom found.

This jealousy
Is for a precious creature; as she's rare,
Must it be great; and as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent. Shakespeare.

On which was wrought the gods and giants' light,
Rare work, all fill'd with terror and delight.
Cooley.

Above the rest I judge one beauty rare. Dryden.

3. Thinly scattered.
The cattle in the fields and meadows green,
Those rare and solitary, these in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upstirring.
Milton.

4. Thin; subtle; not dense.

They are of too tender and weak a nature, as they affect only such a rare and attenuate substance, as the spirit of living creatures. Bacon.

So eagerly the fiend
O'er bog or steep, through brant, rough, dense, or rare,
With head, hands, wings, or feet, pursues his way.
Milton.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost invisible. Newton.

Bodies are much more rare and porous than is commonly believed: water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer than gold, and gold is to rare, as very rarely, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetic effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton.

5. Raw; not fully subdued by the fire.

This is often pronounced rear.
New-laid eggs, with Dancie's busy care,
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.

RARESHOW. n. f. [This word is formed in imitation of the foreign way of pronouncing rare show.] A show carried in a box.

The fashions of the town affect us just like
rareshow, we have the curiosity to peep at them, and nothing more.

Of rareshows he sung, and Punch's feats Gay.
RAREFACTION. n. f. [rarefaction, French; from rarefy.] Extension of the parts of a body, that makes it take up more room than it did before: contrary to condensa- tion.

The water within being rarefied, and by the faction resolved into wind, will force up the man.
Huot.

When exhalations, shut up in the caverns of earth by rarefaction or compression, come out straitened, they strive every way to get the body at liberty. Poet.

RAREFIABLE. adj. [from rarefy.] Admitting rarefaction.

TO RAREFY. v. a. [rarefier, French;
rarus and facio, Latin; rarefy were more proper.] To make thin: contrary to condense.

To the hot equator crowding fast,
Where highly rarefied the yielding air Admits their steam. Thomson.

TO RAREFY. v. n. To become thin.

Earth rarefies to dew; expanded moor.
The subtil dew in air begins to four. Dryden.

RARELY. adv. [from rare.]

1. Seldom; not often; not frequently.
His temperance in sleep resembled that of men; midnight being the usual time of his to rest, and four or five, and very rarely half-hour of his rising.

Rarely they rise by virtue's aid, who be Plung'd in the depth of helpless poverty. De la
Vanessa in her bloom,
Advanc'd like Atalanta's star,
But rarely seen, and seen from far. Scott.

2. Finely; nicely; accurately. This now seldom used but ironically.
How rarely does it meet with this time's gifts.
When man was wold'd to love his enemies. Shakespeare.

RARENESS. n. f. [from rare.]

1. Uncommonness; state of happening seldom; infrequency.

Tickling is most in the soles, arm-holes, &c.
fides: the cause is the thinness of the skin, joined with the rareness of being touch'd there. Tickling is a light motion of the spirits, which the nets of the skin, the sudennets and rareness touch, doth further. Bacon.

For the rareness and rare effect of that point
I'll insert it as presented. Clarendon.

2. Value arising from scarcity.
Roses set in a pool, supported with force, is matter of rareness and pleasures though it be
use. Bacon.

To worthiest things,
Virtue, art, beauty, fortune, now I see
Rareness or use, not nature, value brings. De la

3. Thinness; tenuity.

4. Distance from each other; thinness.

RARITY. n. f. [rareté, French; rarety,
Latin.]

1. Uncommonness; infrequency.

Far from being fond of any flower for its if I meet with any in a field which pleases me give it a place in my garden. Spectator.

2. A thing valued for its scarcity.
Sorrow would be a rarity most beloved.
If all could so become it. Shakespeare.

It would be a rarity worth the seeing, could one show us such a thing as a perfectly rare
enemy. De la

I saw three rarities of different kinds, and pleased me more than any other shows of the show. De la

3. Thinness, subtilty: the contrary density.

R A S

Rasies, under the same outward bulk, have a greater thickness and expansion, or thickness and solidity, which terms, in English, do not signify fully those differences of quantity; therefore I will do it under the names of rarity and density. Digby.

This I do, not to draw any argument against them from the universal rest or accurately equal diffusion of matter, but only that I may better demonstrate the great rarity and tenuity of their imaginary chaos. Bentley.

RASCAL. n. f. [rajcal, Saxon, a lean beast.]

1. A mean fellow; a scoundrel; a forry wretch.

For the rascal commons, left he cared. Spenser.
And when him lit the rascal routs appal,
Men into stones therewith he could transfigure. Spenser.

When Marcus Brutus grow so covetous
To lock such rascal counters from his friends
He ready, gods, with all your thunder-bolts,
Dash him to pieces. Shakespeare.

The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
Join with the traitor. Shakespeare.

But for our gentlemen,
The mouse ne'er shun'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they. Shakespeare.

I am secur'd to rob in that thief's company; the rascal hath remov'd my horse. Shakespeare.
Scoundrels are insolent to their superiors; but it does not become a man of honour to contend with mean rascals. L'Estrange.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not
When you lay siug to snap young Damon's goat? Dryden.

I have sense, to serve my turn, in store,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden.

The poor girl provoked told him he lyed like a rascal. Swift.

2. RASCAL deer, are still mentioned for lean deer.

RASCAL'ION. n. f. [from rascal.] One of the lowest people.

That proud dame
U'd him for like a base rascallion,
That old Pig—what d'ye call him—malion,
That out his mistress out of stone,
Had not to hard a hearted one. Hudibras.

RASCAL'ITY. n. f. [from rascal.] The low mean people.

Pretended philosophers judge as ignorantly in their way, as the rascality of theirs. Glanville.
Jeroboam having procured his people gods, the next thing was to provide priests; hereupon, to the calves he adds a commission, for the approving, trying, and admitting the rascality and lowest of the people to minister in that service. South.

RASCALLY. adj. [from rascal.] Mean; worthless.

Would't thou not be glad to have the niggardly
rascally sheepster come by some notable shame? Shakespeare.

Our rascally porter is fallen fast asleep with the black cloth and sponces, or we might have been taking up by this time. Swift.

To RASE. v. a. [This word is written rase or raze: I would write rase, when it signifies to strike slightly, perfringere; and raze, when it signifies to ruin, delece; rafer,
Fr. rafais, Lat.]

1. To skim; to strike on the surface.

He certifies your lordship, that this night
He dreamt the bear had rafed off his helm. Shaksp.
Was he not in the nearest neighbourhood to death? and might not the bullet, that rafed his cheek, have gone into his head. South.

2. To overthrow; to destroy; to root up.

Her battering engines bent to rafe some city. Milton.

3. To blot out by rasure; to erase.

Though of their names in heavenly records now
Be no memorial, blotted out and rafed. Milton.

RASE. n. f. [from To rase.]

VOL. II.

R A S

1. A cancel.

2. A slight wound.

RASH. adj. [rajsh, Dutch.]

1. Hasty; violent; precipitate; acting without caution or reflection.

This is to be bold without shame, rash without skill, full of words without wit. Ajcham.

Blatt her pride, O ye blest gods! so will you wish on me, when the rash mood is on me. Shakespeare.

Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God; for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few. Ecclesiasticus.

Her rash hand in evil hour,
Forth reaching to the fruit, she pluck'd, she eat. Milton.

2. Hasty; requiring haste. Not in use.

I have scarce leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash. Shakespeare.

3. Quick; sudden: as, rash gunpowder.
Out of use.

RASHI. n. f. [raficia, Italian.]

1. Sattin.

2. [corrupted probably from rajsh.] An effluence of the body; a breaking out.

RASHER. n. f. [rafura lardi, Lat.] A thin slice of bacon.

If we grow all to be pork eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money. Shakespeare.

White and black was all her homely cheer,
And rasbers of sing'd bacon on the coals. Dryden.

Quenches his thirst with ale in nut-brown bowls,
And takes the hasty rasher from the coals. Ang.

RASHLY. adv. [from rajsh.] Hastily; violently;
without due consideration.

This expedition was by York and Talbot Too rashly plotted. Shakespeare.

Men are not rashly to take that for done, which is not done. Bacon.

He that doth any thing rashly, must do it willingly;
for he was free to deliberate or not. L'Estrange.

Declare the secret villain,
The wretch so meanly hafe to injure Phædra,
So rashly brave to dare the sword of Thecous. Smith.

RASHNESS. n. f. [from rajsh.] Foolish contempt of danger; inconsiderate heat of temper; precipitation; temerity.

Who seeth not what sentence it shall enforce us to give against all churches in the world; in us much as there is not one, but hath had many things established in it, which though the scripture did never command, yet for us to condemn were rash-ness. Hooker.

Nature to youth hot rashness doth dispence,
But with cold prudence age doth recompence. Denham.

In so speaking, we offend indeed against truth;
yet we offend not properly by falshood, which is a speaking against our thoughts; but by rashness, which is an affirming or denying, before we have sufficiently informed ourselves. South.

The vain Morat by his own rashness wrought,
Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought.

Believ'd me his, because I spoke him fair. Dryden.

RASP. n. f. [rafpo, Ital.] A delicious berry that grows on a species of the bramble;
a raspberry.

Set forrel amongst rasps, and the rasps will be the smaller. Bacon.

Now will the corinthis, now the rasps supply
Delicious draughts, when prest to wines. Philipp.

To RASP. v. a. [rafpen, Dut. rasper, Fr.]
raspare, Ital.] To rub to powder with a very rough file.

Some authors have advis'd the rasping of these bones; but in this case it is needless. Wifeman.

Having prepared hard woods and ivory for the lathe with rasping, they pitch it between the pikes. Mozon.

RASP. n. f. [from the verb.] A large rough file commonly used to wear away wood.

R A T

Cafe-hardening is used by file-cutters, when they make coarse files, and generally most rasps have formerly been made of iron and cafe-hardened. Mozon.

RAS'PATORY. n. f. [raspatoir, Fr. from rasp.] A surgeon's rasp.

I put into his mouth a raspatory, and pulled away the corrupt flesh, and with cauteries burnt it to a crust. Wifeman.

RAS'BERRY, or Raspberry. n. f. A kind of berry.

Raspberries are of three sorts; the common wild one, the large red garden raspberry, which is one of the pleasantest of fruits, and the white, which is little inferior to the red. Mortimer.

RASPBERRY-BUSH. n. f. A species of bramble.

RAS'URF. n. f. [rafura, Latin.]

1. The act of scraping or shaving.

2. A mark in a writing where something has been rubbed out.

Such a writing ought to be free from any vituperation of rafure. Ayliffe.

RAT. n. f. [ratte, Dut. rat, Fr. ratta, Span.]

An animal of the mouse kind that infests houses and ships.

Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that run down their proper bane. Shaksp.

Make you ready your stiff butts and clubs,
Rome and her Rats are at the point of battle. Shaksp.

I have seen the time, with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats. Shakespeare.

Thus horses will knable at walls, and rats will gnaw non. Brown.

If in despair he goes out of the way like a rat with a dose of arsenick, why he dies nobly. Dennis.

To smell a RAT. To be put on the watch by suspicion, as the cat by the scent of a rat; to suspect danger.

Quoth Hudibras, I smell a rat,
Ralpho, thou dost prevaricate. Hudibras.

RAT'ABLE. adj. [from rate.] Set at a certain value.

The Danes brought in a reckoning of money by ones, per oras; I collect out of the abbey-book of Burton, that twenty oras were ratable to two marks of silver. C Camden.

RAT'ABLY. adv. Proportionably.

Many times there is no proportion of shot and powder allowed ratably by that quantity of the great ordnance. Ruleigh.

RATAFI'A. n. f. A liquor, prepared from the kernels of apricots and spirits.

Bayley.

RAT'VN. n. f. An Indian cane. Dut.

RATCH. n. f. In clockwork, a sort of wheel, which serves to lift up the de-tents every hour, and thereby make the clock strike. Bayley.

RATE. n. f. [ratas, Lat. rate, old Fr.]

1. Price fixed on any thing.

How many things do we value, because they come at dear rates from Japan and China, which if they were our own manufacture, common to be had, and for a little money, would be neglected! Locke.

I'll not betray the glory of my name,
'Tis not for me, who have prefer'd a rate,
To buy an empire at so bad a rate. Dryden.

The price of land has never changed, the several changes have been made in the rate of interest by law, nor now that the rate of interest is by law the same, is the price of land every where the same. Locke.

2. Allowance settled.

His allowance was a continual allowance, a daily
rate for every day. 2 Kings.

They oblig'd themselves to remit after the rate of twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum, divided into for many monthly payments. Addison.

R A T

3. Degree; comparative height or value.

I am a spirit of no common rate;
The summer still doth tend upon my state. Shaksp.
In this did his holiness and godliness appear above the rate and pitch of other men, in that he was so infinitely merciful. Calamy.

To which relation whatsoever is done agreeably, is morally and essentially good; and whatsoever is done otherwise, is at the same rate morally evil. South.

4. Quantity assignable.

Is goodly form comes on the enemy;
And by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand. Shaksp.

5. That which sets value; principle on which value is set.

Heretofore the rate and standard of wit was very different from what it is now-a-days: no man was then accounted a wit for speaking such things, as degraded to have the tongue cut out. South.

A virtuous heathen is, at this rate, as happy as a virtuous christian. Atterbury.

6. Manner of doing any thing; degree to which any thing is done.

I have divided mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make mean to be abridged
From such a noble rate. Shakspere.

Many of the horse could not march at that rate,
nor come up soon enough. Clarendon.

Tom hating his dislike of some trade his mistress had said, the asked him how he would talk to her after marriage, if he talked at this rate before? Idly.

7. Tax imposed by the parish.

They paid the church and parish rate,
And took, but read not the receipt. Prior.

To RATE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To value at a certain price.

I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And yet, dear lady,
Rating myself as nothing, you shall see
How much I was a braggart. Shakspere.

We may there be instructed, how to name and rate all goods, by those that will concentre into society. Bayle.

You seem not high enough your joys to rate,
You stand indebted a vast sum to fate,
And should large thanks for the great blessing pay. Dryden.

2. [reita, Islandick.] To chide hastily and vehemently.

Go rate thy minions, proud insulting boy;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign? Shakspere.

An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir. Shakspere.

What is all that a man enjoys, from a year's conferio, comparable to what he feels for one hour when his conscience shall take him aside and rate him by himself? South.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind, and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the faults, rather than a hasty rating of the child for it. Locke.

To RATE, v. n. To make an estimate.

In rating when things are thus little and frivolous, we must not judge by our own pride and passions, which count nothing little, but aggrandize every slight or injury that is done to ourselves. Huttenwell.

RATH. n. f. A hill. I know not whence derived.

There is a great use among the Irish, to make great assemblies upon a rath or hill, there to parly about matters and wrongs between townships or private persons. Spenfer.

RATH. adj. [rath, Sax.-quickly.] Early; coming before the usual time.

This is my summer worn away and wasted,
Thus is my harvest hasten'd all to rathes,
The ear, that huddled fair, is burnt and blasted,
And all my hoped gain is turn'd to scathe. Spenfer.

Rath ripe are some, and some of later kind,
Of golden fower, and some of purple rind. May.

R A T

Bring the rath primrose that forsaken dies.
The tufed crow-tue and pale jessamine. Milton.

RATHER. adv. [This is a comparative from rath; rath, Sax. soon. Now out of use. One may still say, by the same form of speaking, I will sooner do this than that; that is, I like better to do this.]

1. More willingly; with better liking.

Almighty God desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live. Common Prayer.

2. Preferably to the other; with better reason.

'Tis rather to be thought, that an heir had no such right by divine institution, than that God should give such a right, but yet leave it undeterminate who such heir is. Locke.

3. In a greater degree than otherwise.

He fought through the world, but fought in vain,
And no where finding, rather fear'd her slain. Dryd.

4. More properly.

This is an art,
Which does mend nature, change it rather, but
The art itself is nature. Shakspere.

5. Especially.

You are come to me in a happy time,
The rather for I have some sport in hand. Shaksp.

6. To have RATHER. [Thus is, I think, a barbarous exprellion of late intrusion into our language, for which it is better to say will rather.] To desire in preference.

'Tis with reluctance he is provoked by our impenitence to apply the discipline of severity; he had rather mankind should adore him as their patron and benefactor. Rogers.

RATIFICATION. n. f. [ratification, Fr. from ratify.] The act of ratifying; confirma- tion.

RATIFIER. n. f. [from ratify.] The per- son or thing that ratifies.

They cry, "chufe we Lucreties for our king;"
The ratifiers and props of every word,
Caps, hands, and tongues applaud it to the clouds. Shakspere.

To RATIFY, v. a. [ratum facio, Latin.] To confirm; to settle; to establish.

The church being a body which dieth not, hath always power, as occasion requireth, not less to ordain that which never was, than to ratify what hath been before. Hooker.

By the help of these, with him above
To ratify the work, we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights. Shaksp.

We have rat'ed upon them the borders of Judea. 1 Maccabees.

God ratified their prayers by the judgment brought down upon the head of him whom they prayed against. South.

Tell me, my friend, from whence hadst thou
the skill,
So nicely to distinguish good from ill?
And what thou art to follow, what to fly,
This to condemn, and that to ratify? Dryden.

RATIO. n. f. [Lat.] Proportion.

Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio. Cheyne.

To RATIOCINATE, v. n. [ratiocinor, Lat.] To reason; to argue.

RATIOCIATION. n. f. [ratiocinatio, Lat.] The act of reasoning; the act of deducing consequences from premises.

In simple terms, exprelling the open notions of things, which the second act of reason compoundeth into propositions, and the last into syllogisms and forms of demonstration. Brown.

The difference of that connexion or dependence which there is between several propositions, whereby we are enabled to infer one proposition from another, which is called ratiocination or discourse. Wilkins.

Can any kind of ratiocination allow Christ all the marks of the Messiah, and yet deny him to be the Messiah? South.

R A T

Such an interposition would be self-evident without any ratiocination or study, and could not fail constantly to exert its energy in their minds. Bentley.

RATIOCINATIVE. adj. [from ratiocinate]

Argumentative; advancing by process of discourse.

Some confutations are so intimately and evidently connexed to, or found in the premises, that the conclusion is attained quasi per saltum, and without any thing of ratiocinative process, even as the eye sees his object immediately, and without any pre-

RATIONAL. adj. [rationalis, Latin.]

1. Having the power of reasoning.

God decreed to create man after his own image,
a free and rational agent. Huttenwell.

As that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of many considered as a sensitive being, is filed natural good; to that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of man, as a rational, voluntary and free agent, is filed moral good; and the contrary to it moral evil. Wilkins.

It is our glory and happiness to have a rational nature, that is endued with wisdom and reason, that is capable of imitating the divine nature, then a man must be our glory and happiness to improve our reason and wisdom, to act up to the excellency of our rational nature, and to imitate God in all our actions, to the utmost of our power. Law.

2. Agreeable to reason.

What higher in her society thou find'st
Attractive, humane, rational, love still. Milton.

When the conclusion is deduced from the messing dictates of our faculties, we say the inference is rational. Glasse.

If your arguments be rational, offer them in a moving manner as the nature of the subject will admit; but beware of letting the pathetick part swallow up the rational. Seyt.

3. Wise; judicious: as, a rational man.

RATIONAL. n. f. [from ratio, Lat.] A detail with reasons: as, Dr. Sparrow's Rationale of the Common Prayer.

RATIONALIST. n. f. [from rational.] One who proceeds in his disquisitions and practice wholly upon reason.

He often used this comparison; the empirical philosophers are like to physicians; they only lay up and use their store: the rationalists are like to spiders; they spin all out of their own bowels: but give me a philosopher, who, like the bee, hath a middle faculty, gathering from abroad, but digesting that which is gathered by his own virtue. Bacon.

RATIONALITY. n. f. [from rational.]

1. The power of reasoning.

When God has made rationality the common portion of mankind, how came it to be this increase? Government of the Tongue.

2. Reasonableness.

In human occurrences, there have been many well directed intentions, whose rationalities will never bear a rigid examination. Brown.

RATIONALLY. adv. [from rational.] Rea- sonably; with reason.

Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, it may rationally be conjectured, that a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than to refuse it. South.

RATIONALNESS. n. f. [from rational.]

The state of being rational.

RATSBANE. n. f. [rat and bane.] Poison for rats; arsenick.

He would throw ratsbane up and down a house,
where children might come at it. L'Estrange.

When murder's out, what vice can we advance?
Unless the new-found poisoning trick of France.
And when their art of ratsbane we have got,
By way of thanks, we'll send 'em o'er our plot. Dry.

I can hardly believe the relation of his last poisoned, but such might do it, though ratsbane would not. South.

RATTEN. n. f. A kind of stuf.

We'll rig in Meath-street Egypt's haughty queen,
And Anthony shall court her in ratten. South.

R A V

To RA'TTLE. v. n. [rattelen, Dutch.]

1. To make a quick sharp noise with frequent repetitions and collisions of bodies not very sonorous: when bodies are sonorous, it is called jingling.

The quiver rattled against him. Job.
The noise of a whip, of the rattling of the wheels, of prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nahum.

They had, to affright the enemies horses, big rattles covered with parchment, and small stones within; but the rattling of shot might have done better service. Hayward.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell;
He figured his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled all was well. Dryden.

There the assemblies all her blackest storms,
And the rude hail in rattling tempest forms. Addis

2. To speak eagerly and noisily.

With jealous eyes at distance she hath seen
Whispering with Jove the silver-footed queen;
Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.

He is a man of pleasure, and a free-thinker; he is an assessor of liberty and property; he rattles it out against popery. Swift.

To RA'TTLE. v. a.

1. To move any thing so as to make a rattle or noise.

Her chains she rattles, and her whip she shakes. Dryden

2. To stun with a noise; to drive with a noise.

Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder. Shakspeare.

He should be well enough able to scatter the
In his a flight of birds, and rattle away this swarm of bees with their king. Bacon.

3. To scold; to rail at with clamour.

Hearing Joseph had been beforehand, he sent for him in a rage, and rattled him with a thousand traitors and villains for robbing his home. L'Estrange.
She that would sometimes rattle off her servants sharply, now if she saw them drunk, never took notice. Arbuthnot.

RA'TTLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A quick noise numbly repeated.

I'll hold ten pound my dream is out;
I'd tell it you but for the rattle
Of those confounded drums. Prior.

2. Empty and loud talk.

All this ado about the golden age, is but an empty rattle and frivolous conceit. Hakewell.

3. An instrument, which agitated makes a clattering noise.

The rattles of lutes and the cymbals of Brasilia nearly enough resemble each other. Raleigh.
Opinions are the rattles of immature intellects, but the advanced reasons have outgrown them. Glauville.

They want no rattles for their froward mood,
Nor need to reconcile them to their food. Dryden.

Farewel then verse, and love, and ev'ry toy,
Be thyne and rattles of the mau or boy;
What right, what true, what fit we justly call,
Let this be all my care, for this is all. Pope.

A plant. [crista galli, Latin.] An herb resembling a cock's comb; loufewort.

RA'TTLEHEAD. adj. [rattle and head.]

Giddy; not steady.

RA'TTLESNAKE. n. f. A kind of serpent.

The rattlesnake is so called, from the rattle at the end of his tail. Grew.

She takes her being at the very sight of him, and leaps plump into his arms, like a charmed bird at the mouth of a rattlesnake. Moor.

RA'TTLESNAKE Root. n. f.

Rattlesnake root, called also fence, belongs to a kind of native of Virginia; the Indians use it as a certain remedy against the bite of a rattlesnake. Hill.

RA'VAGE. v. a. [ravager, Fr.] To lay waste; to sack; to ransack; to spoil; to pillage; to plunder.

Already Caesar

Has ravaged more than half the globe, and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Add.
His blades obey, and quit the howling hill,
The shatter'd forest, and the ravag'd vale. Thomf.

RA'VAGE. n. f. [ravage, Fr. from the verb.]
Spoil; ruin; waste.

Some cruel pleasure will from thence arise,
To view the mighty ravage of your eyes. Dryden.

Would one think twice possible for love
To make such ravage in a noble soul! Addis.

Those savages were not then, what civilized mankind is now; but without mutual society, with out arms of offence, without houses or fortifications, an obvious and exposed prey to the ravage and devouring beasts. Bentley.

RA'VAGER. n. f. [from ravage.] Plunderer; spoiler.

When that mighty empire was overthrown by the northern people, vast sums of money were buried to escape the plundering of the conquerors, and what remained was carried off by those ravagers. Swift.

RAU'CITY. n. f. [raucus, Lat.] Hoarseness; loud rough noise.

Inequality not stayed upon, but passing, is rather an eucresis of sweetness; as in the purring of a wreathed string, and in the raucity of a trumpet. Bacon.

To RAVE. v. n. [reten, Dut. réier, Fr.]

1. To be delirious; to talk irrationally.

Men who thus rave, we may conclude their brains are turned, and one may as well read lectures at Bedlam as treat with such. Gor. of the Tongue.

It soon infecteth the whole member, and is accompanied with watching and raving. Wynman.

Her grief has wrought her into frenzy;
The images her troubled fancy forms
Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed.

Sometimes the raves for music, light, and air;
Nor air, nor light, nor music calms her pains. Smith.

2. To burst out into furious exclamations as if mad.

Shall these wild dissemblers of thy mind,
This tempest of thy tongue, thus rave, and find
No opposition? Sandys.

Our ravings and complaints are but like arrows shot up into the air, at no mark, and so to no purpose. Temple.

Wonder at my patience,
Have I not cause to rave, and beat my breast,
To rend my heart with grief, and run distracted? Addis.

Revenge, revenge, thus raving through the streets,
I'll cry for vengeance. Southern.

He swore he could not leave me,
With ten thousand ratings. Race.

3. To be unreasonably fond: with upon before the object of fondness. A colloquial and improper sense.

Another partiality is as fantastical and wild, attributing all knowledge to the ancients or the moderns: thus raving upon antiquity, in matter of poetry, Horace has wittily exposed in one of his satires. Locke.

To RA'VEL. v. a. [ravelen, Dutch, to entangle.]

1. To entangle; to entwine one with another; to make intricate; to involve; to perplex.

It then such praise the Macedonian got,
For having rudely cut the Gordian knot;
What glory's due to him that could divide
Such ravel'd intricacies, has the knot untied,
And without stroke to twine a passage made,
Where craft and malice such obstructions laid? Waller.

2. To unweave; to unknot; as, to ravel out a tuft or piece of knit work.

Let him for a pair of reachy knees
Or pulling in your neck with his dabb'd fingers,
Make you to ravel all this matter out. Shakspeare.

Sleep, that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care. Shakspeare.

3. To hurry over in confusion. This seems to be the meaning in Drigby.

They but ravel it over loosely, and pitch upon disputing against particular conclusions, that at the first encounter of them singe, seem harsh to them. Drigby.

To RA'VEL. v. n.

1. To fall into perplexity or confusion.

As you unwind her love from him,
Left it should ravel, and be good to none,
You must provide to bottom it on me. Shakspeare.

Give the reins to wandering thought,
Regardless of his glory's diminution,
Till by their own perplexities involv'd,
They ravel more, still less resolv'd,
But never find self satisfying solition. Milton.

2. To work in perplexity; to busy himself with intricacies.

It will be needless to ravel far into the records of elder times; every man's memory will suggest many pertinent instances. Decay of Pity.

The humour of raveling into all their mystical or intangled matters, mingling with the interest and passions of princes and of parties, and thereby heightened and inflamed, produced infinite disputes. Temple.

R'VELIN. n. f. [Fr.] In fortification, a work that consists of two faces, that make a salient angle, commonly called half moon by the soldiers: it is raised before the courtines or counterescarpments. Ditch.

RA'VEN. n. f. [hæræn, Saxon.] A large black fowl, whose cry is supposed ominous.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Shakspeare.

Come thou day in night,
For thou wilt be upon the wings of night,
Whiter than snow upon a raven's back. Shakspeare.

I have seen a perfectly white raven, as to bill as well as feathers. Boyle.

He made the greedy ravens to be Flims' caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.

On several parts a several praise bestows,
The ruby lips, and well proportion'd nose,
The snowy skin, the raven glossy hair,
The dupled cheek. Dryden.

The raven once in snowy plumes was dress'd,
White as the whitest dove's naturally'd breast,
His tongue, his prating tongue had chang'd him quite
To sooty black knots from the purest white. Addis.

Hence Gildon rails, that raven of the pit,
Who thrives upon the carcasses of wit. Young.

To RA'VEN. v. a. [hæræn, Saxon, to rob.]

To devour with great eagerness and rapacity.

Thriftless ambition! that will raven up
Thine own life's means. Shakspeare.

Our names do pursue,
Take rats that raven down their proper bane,
A thirsty evil; and when we drink we die. Shakspeare.

The cloyed will
That satiate, yet unsatisfied desire, that tab
Both filled and running, ravening first the lamb,
Lungs after for the garbage. Shakspeare.

There is a conspiracy of the prophets, like a roving hon encircling the prey. Enoch.

To RA'VEN. v. n. To prey with rapacity.

Benjamin shall raven as a wolf; in the morning
he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil. Genis.

They gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion. Isaiah.

The more they fed, they raven'd still for more;
They drank'd more Dan, and left Peorthen poor;
But when some lay pretence'd to be chaste,
The Gommands made it their inheritance. Dryden.

Convulsions in man's nerves and cars his breath,
His flying life is chas'd by raving pains
Through all his doubles in the winding veins. Blackmore.

RA'VENOUS. adj. [from raven.] Furiously voracious; hungry to rage.

R A V

Thy desires
Are wild, bloody, star'd, and ravenous. Shaksp.
As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcases. Milton.

What! the kind Ismena,
That nur'd me, watch'd my sickness! oh, she watch'd me,
As ravenous vultures watch the dying lion. Smith.
RA'VENOUSLY. adv. [from ravenous.] With raging voracity.

RA'VENOUSNESS. n. f. [from ravenous.]
Rage for prey; furious voracity.
The ravenousness of a lion or bear are natural to them; yet their mission upon an extraordinary occasion may be an actus imperatus of divine providence. Hale.

RAUCOUS. The old pret. and part. puff. of reach. Snatched; reached; attained.
His tail was stretched out in wondrous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it reached.
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought. Spenser.

In like delights of bloody game
He trod was till ripe years he reached,
And there abode whilst any beast of name
Walk'd in that forest. Spenser.
This staff of honour reached, there let it stand,
Where best it fits to be, in Henry's hand. Shaksp.
The hand of death has reached him. Shaksp.
Gritus furiously running in upon Schendeu, violently reached from his head his rich cap of fables, and with his horsemen took him. Knotter.

RA'VIS. n. f. [from raven; this were better written raven.]

1. Prey; food gotten by violence.
The lion strangled for his honours, and filled his hides with prey, and his dens with ravin. Nahum.
To war, who with eternal banner pure,
Alike is hell, or paradise, or heav'n;
There best, where most with ravin I may meet. Milton.

2. Rapine; rapaciousness.
They might not be in a condition exposed to the ravins of any victim that may find them, being unable to escape. Ron.

RA'VINGLY. adv. [from rave.] With frenzy; with distraction.

In this depth of mutes and divers sorts of discourses, would the ravishing have remained. Sidney.

To RA'VISH. v. a. [ravir, French.]

1. To concuprate by force; to despoil by violence.

They ravished the women and maids. Tamart.
They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her. Shaksp.

2. To take away by violence.

These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. Shaksp.

Their vow is made
To raulack Tryp, within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen sleeps. Shaksp.

His appear'd;
And all his praise, to every syllable heard;
But then a rock, in size more amplified,
Then first he ravish'd to him. Chapman.

I owe myself the cure,
My fame and injur'd honour to repair;
From thy own tent, proud man, in thy despite,
This hand shall ravish thy pretended right. Dryden.

3. To delight to rapture; to transport.

Thou hast ravished my heart. Canticles.
Be thou ravished always with her love. Proverbs.

RA'VISHER. n. f. [ravisseur, French; from ravish.]

1. He that embraces a woman by violence.

They are cruel and bloody, common ravishers of women, and murderers of children. Spenser.

A ravisher must repair the temporal detriment to the mind, and give her a dowry, or marry her if he desire it. Taylor.

R A W

Turn hence those pointed glories of your eyes!
For if more charms beneath those circles rise,
So weak my virtue, they so strong appear,
I shall turn rauger to keep you here. Dryden.

2. One who takes any thing by violence.

Shall the rauger display your hair,
While the fops envy, and the ladies stare? Pope.

RA'VISHINGLY. adv. [from ravishing.] To extremity of pleasure.

As all the housewiferies of deities are
To hear a voice to ravishingly fair. Chapman.

RA'VISHMENT. n. f. [ravissement, French;
from ravish.]

1. Violation; forcible concupration.

Of his several ravishments, betrayings and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables of his transformations and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries. Raleigh.

Tell them ancient stories of the ravishment of classic maidens. Taylor.

I told them I was one of their knight-errants that delivered them from ravishment. Dryden.

2. Transport; rapture; ecstacy; pleasing violence on the mind.

All things joy, with ravishment
Attracted by thy beauty full to gaze. Milton.

Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould
Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment? Milton.

What a ravishment was that, when having found out the way to venture Hiero's crown, he leaped out of the bath, and, as if he were suddenly possessed, ran naked up and down! Wilkins.

RAW. adj. [hneap, Saxon; raa, Danish;
rouw, Dutch.]

1. Not subdued by the fire.

Full of great lumps of flesh, and goblets raw.
Spenser.

2. Not covered with the skin.

All about the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's saw;
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw. Shaksp.

If there be quick raw flesh in the ridings, it is an old leprosy. Leicester.

3. Sore.

This her knight was feeble and too faint,
And all his muscles waken weak and raw
Through long imprisonment. Spenser.

4. Immature; unripe; not concocted.

5. Unseasoned; unripe in skill.

Some people, very raw and ignorant, are very unworthily and unskilfully nominated to places, when men of desert are held back and unpreferred. Raleigh.

People, while young and raw, and soft natured, are apt to think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of another man's, but when experience shall have once opened their eyes, they will find that a friend is the gift of God. South.

Sails were spread to every wind that blew,
Raw were the sailors, and the depths were new. Dry.

Well I knew
What perils youthful ardour would pursue,
Young as thou wert in dangers, raw to war. Dryd.

6. New. This seems to be the meaning.

I have in my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging jacks. Shaksp.

7. Bleak; chill.

They carried always with them that weed, as their house, their bed, and their garment; and coming lastly into Ireland, they found there more special use thereof, by reason of the raw cold climate. Spenser.

8. Youthful still in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatick day. Shaksp.

Once upon a raw and guffy day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores. Shaksp.

8. Not decocted.

Disfilled waters will last longer than raw waters.
Bacon.

9. Not spun or twisted: as, raw silk.

RA'WBONED. adj. [raw and bone.] Having bones scarcely covered with flesh.

R A Z

Lean ramben'd rascals! who would e'er suppose
They had such courage? Shaksp.

The wolf was content to barter away a rawhead
carcase for a smooth and fat one. L'Estrange.

RA'WHEAD. n. f. [raw and head.] The name of a spectre, mentioned to fright children.

Hence draw thy theme, and to the stage permit
Rawhead and bloody bones, and hands and feet, Ragouts for Terens or Thyestes drest. Dryden.

Servants awe children, and keep them in subordination, by telling them of rawhead and bloody bones. Lake.

RA'WLY. adv. [from rau.]

1. In a raw manner.

2. Unskilfully; without experience.

3. Newly.

Some crying for a surgeon, some upon the debt
they owe, some upon their children rawly left. Shaksp.

RA'WNESS. n. f. [from raw.]

1. State of being raw.

Chalk helpeth concoction, so it be out of a deep well; for then it cureth the rawness of the water. Bacon.

2. Unskilfulness.

Charles v. considering the rawness of his men, established a pilot major for their examination. Hobart.

3. Hasty manner. This seems to be the meaning in this obscure passage.

Why in that rawness left he wife and children Without leave taking? Shaksp.

RAY. n. f. [raie, rayon, Fr. radius, Lat.]

1. A beam of light.

These eyes that roll in vain
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn. Milton.

The least light, or part of light, which may be stop alone, or do or suffer any thing alone, while the rest of the light doth not or suffers not, I call a ray of light. Newton.

Sol through white curtains shot a timorous ray.
And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day. John.

2. Any lustre corporeal or intellectual.

The air sharpen'd his visual ray. Milton.
He now, observant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sunset of thy various day. Pope.

3. [raye, French; raia, Latin.] A fish.

4. [folium, Lat.] An herb. Amman.

To RAY. v. a. [raye, Fr. from the noun]

To streak; to mark in long lines. An old word.

Beside a bubbling fountain low the lay,
Which the increased with her bleeding heart,
And the clean waves with purple gore did ray. Spenser.

His horse is rayed with the yellows. Shaksp.
Was ever man so beaten? was ever man
rayed? was ever man so weary? Shaksp.

RAY, for array.

RAZE. n. f. [rayz, a root, Spanish.] A root of ginger. This is commonly written race, but less properly.

I have a gammon of bacon and two razes of ger to be delivered. Shaksp.

To RAZE. v. a. [razer, Fr. razis, Lat.]

See RASE.

1. To overthrow; to ruin; to subvert.

Will you suffer a temple, how poorly built but yet a temple of your deity, to be razed? Shaksp.

He yoketh your rebellious necks,
Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns. Shaksp.

It grieved the tyrant, that to baste a tower so long hold out, to that he would threaten to
it. Shaksp.

Shed christian blood, and populous cities
Because they're taught to use some razed houses. Shaksp.

We touch'd with joy
The royal hand that raz'd unhappy Troy. Shaksp.

The place would be razed to the ground, and foundations down with salt. Shaksp.

2. To efface.

REA

Real this marriage; cancelling your fame,
Raising the characters of your renown. Shakespeare.
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain. Shaksp.
He in devotion sets
Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raze,
Quite out their native language; and instead,
To sow a jangling noise of words. Milton.
3. To extirpate.
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their fictions and their family. Shaksp.
RAZOR. n. f. [razor, Latin.] A knife with a thick blade and fine edge used in shaving.
Zeal, except ordered aright, useth the razor with such eagerness, that the life of religion is thereby hazardous. Hooker.
These words are razors to my wounded heart.
Shakespeare.
Those thy boist'rous locks, not by the sword
Of noble warrior, so to stain his honour,
But by the barber's razor best subdued. Milton.
Razor makers generally clip a small bar of Venice steel between two small bars of Flemish steel, and weld them together, to strengthen the back of the razor. Morgan.
As in smooth oil the razor best is whet,
So wit is by politeness sharpest set.
Their want of edge from their offence is seen;
Both pains at least when exquisitely keen. Young.
RAZORS of a boar. A boar's tusks.
RAZORABLE. adj. [from razor.] Fit to be shaved. Not in use.
New born chins be rough and razorable. Shaksp.
RAZORING. n. f.
The fluting or razing of a scabbard in length and breadth a man's finger. Cave.
RAZURE. n. f. [rasure, F. rasura, Lat.]
Act of shaving.
Oh, your defect speaks loud;
It well deserves with characters of brass
A lasting remembrance, 'ganit the tooth of time
And razure of oblivion. Shakespeare.
RE is an inseparable particle used by the Latin, and from them borrowed by us to denote iteration or backward action: as,
return, to come back; to recede, to live again; repercussion, the act of driving back: reciprocation, as, to recriminate.
It is put almost arbitrarily before verbs and verbal nouns, so that many words so compounded will perhaps be found, which it was not necessary to infer. It sometimes adds little to the simple meaning of the word, as in rejoice.
REACCESS. n. f. [re and access.] Visit renewed.
Let pass the qualling and wathing of all things by the reaches, and their reviving by the reaches of the sun. Hakewill.
TO REACH. v. a. ancient preterit raught.
[reacan, Saxon.]
1. To touch with the hand extended.
The long flood, but could not reach. Milton.
What are riches, empire, pow'r,
But larger means to gratify the will;
The steps by which we climb to rise and reach Our wish, and that obtained, down with a loading
Of sceptres, crowns and thrones: they've serv'd their end,
And there like lumber to be left and scorn'd?
Congreve.
2. To arrive at; to attain any thing distant; to strike from a distance.
The coast so long desir'd
Thy troops shall reach, and having reach'd, repent.
Dryden.
What remains beyond this, we have no more a positive notion of, than a mariner has of the depth of the sea; where, having let down his sounding line, he reaches no bottom. Locke.

REA

It must fall perhaps before this letter reaches your hands. Pope.
3. To strike from a distant place.
O patron pow'r, thy present aid afford,
That I may reach the beat! Dryden.
4. To fetch from some place distant, and give.
He reached me a full cup. 2 Esdras.
5. To bring forward from a distant place.
Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side. John.
6. To hold out; to stretch forth.
These kinds of goodness are so nearly united to the things which desire them, that we scarcely perceive the appetite to stir in reaching forth her hand towards them. Hooker.
7. To attain; to gain; to obtain.
The best accounts of the appearances of nature, which human penetration can reach, come short of its reality. Chryse.
8. To transfer.
Through such hands
The knowledge of the souls is reach'd to man. Rowe.
9. To penetrate to.
Whatever alterations are made in the body, it they reach not the mind, there is no perception. Locke.
10. To be adequate to.
The law reached the intention of the promoters,
and this act fixed the natural price of money. Locke.
If these examples of grown men reach not the case of children, let them examine. Locke.
11. To extend to.
Thy desire leads to no excess that reaches blame. Milton.
Her imprecations reach not to the tomb,
They shut not out society in death. Addison.
12. To extend; to spread abroad.
Trees reach'd too far then pamp'ring boughs. Milton.
13. To take in the hand.
Let he reach of the tree of life, and cut. Milton.
TO REACH. v. n.
1. To be extended.
We hold that the power which the church hath lawfully to make laws, doth extend unto sundry things of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and such other matters whereto their opinion is, that the church's authority and power doth not reach. Hooker.
The new world reaches quite into the torrid zone
in one tropic to the other. Boyle.
When men pursue their thoughts of space, they are apt to stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end too, and reach'd no farther. Locke.
If I do not ask any thing improper, let me be buried by Theodosius; my vow reaches no farther than the grave. Addison.
The influence of the stars reaches to many events,
which are not in the power of reason. Swift.
2. To be extended far.
Great men have reaching hands. Shakespeare.
3. To penetrate.
He hath deliver'd it to your hand, and ye have than them in a rage, that reach'd up into heaven. 2 Chronicles.
We reach forward into futurity, and bow up to our thoughts objects hid in the remote depths of time. Addison.
4. To make efforts to attain.
Could a sailor always supply new line, and find the plummet sink without stopping, he would be in the posture of the mind, reaching after a positive idea of infinity. Locke.
REACH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Act of touching or seizing by extension of the hand.
2. Power of reaching or taking in the hand.
There may be in a man's reach a book containing pictures and discourses, capable to delight and instruct him, which yet he may never have the will to open. Locke.
3. Power of attainment or management.
In actions, within the reach of power in him, a man seems as free as it is possible for freedom to make him. Locke.

REA

4. Power; limit of faculties.
Our sight may be considered as a more diffusive kind of touch, that brings into our reach some of the most remote parts of the universe. Addison.
Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
How far your genius, taste, and learning go. Pope.
5. Contrivance; artful scheme; deep thought.
Drawn by others, who had deeper reaches than themselves to matters which they least intended.
Hayward.
Some, under types, have affected obscurity to amuse and make themselves admired for profound reaches. Howell.
6. A fetch; an artifice to attain some distant advantage.
The duke of Parma had particular reaches and ends of his own underhand, to cross the design.
Bacon.
7. Tendency to distant consequences.
Strain not my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakespeare.
8. Extent.
The confines met of empyrean heav'n,
And of this world, and, on the left hand, hell
With long reach interpos'd. Milton.
TO REACT. v. a. [re and act.] To return
the impulse or impression.
The lungs being the chief instrument of sanguification, and acting strongly upon the chyle to bring it to an animal fluid, must be reacted upon as strongly. Arbuthnot.
Cut off your hand, and you may do
With t'other hand the work of two;
Because the soul her power contracts,
And on the brother limb reacts. Swift.
REACTION. n. f. [reaction, Fr. from react.]
The reciprocation of any impulse or force impressed, made by the body on which such impression is made: action and reaction are equal.
Do not great bodies confer their heat the longest,
their parts heating one another; and may not great,
dense, and fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light so copiously, as, by the emission and reaction of its light, and the reflections and refractions of its rays within its pores, to grow still hotter till it comes to a certain degree of heat, such as is that of the sun? Newton.
Almo many substances, of a mild nature, act with small force upon the solids, and as the action and reaction are equal, the smallest degree of force in the solids digests them. Arbuthnot.
READ. n. f. [rab, Saxon; raed, Dutch.]
1. Counsel.
The man is blest that hath not lent
To wicked read his ear. Sternhold.
2. Saying; law. This word is in both senses obsolete.
This reare is rite that oftentime
Great chambers fall unfast,
In humble dials is looking fast,
The trade is not to tuck. Spenser.
TO READ. v. a. pret. read, part. pass.
read. [rab, Saxon.]
1. To peruse any thing written.
I have seen her take forth paper, write upon't,
read it, and afterwards seal it. Shakespeare.
The passage you must have read, though since slipped out of your memory. Pope.
If we have not leisure to read over the book itself regularly, then by the titles of chapters we may be directed to peruse several sections. Watts.
2. To discover by characters or marks.
An armed cate did lye
In whose dead face he read great ingenuinity. Spenser.
3. To learn by observation.
Those about her
From her still read the perfect ways of honour. Shakespeare.
4. To know fully.
O most delicate friend!
Who is't can read a woman. Shakespeare.

To READ. v. n.

1. To perform the act of perusing writing. It shall be with him, and he shall read therein, that he may learn to fear the Lord. Deuteronomy.

2. To be studious in books.

'Tis sure that Fleury reads. Taylor.

3. To know by reading.

I have read of an eastern king, who put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence. Swift.

READ. particip. adj. [from read; the verb read is pronounced reed; the preterit and participle red.] Skilful by reading.

Virgil's shepherds are too well read in the philosophy of Epicurus. Dryden.

We have a poet among us, of a genius as exalted as his stature, and who very well read in Longinus his treatise concerning the sublime. Addison.

READING. n. f. [from read.]

1. Study in books; perusal of books.

Though reading and conversation may furnish us with many ideas of men and things, yet it is our own meditation must form our judgment. Watts.

Less reading than makes felons' escape,
Less human genius than God gives an ape,
Can make a Ciber. Pope.

2. A lecture; a prelection.

3. Public recital.

The Jews had their weekly readings of the law. Hooker.

Give attention to reading, exhortation and doctrine. 1 Timothy.

4. Variation of copies.

That learned prelate has restored some of the readings of the authors with great sagacity. Arbuth.

READEPTION. n. f. [re and adeptus, Lat.]

Recovery; act of regaining.

Will any say, that the redeption of Trevigi was matter of scruple? Bacon.

READER. n. f. [from read.]

1. One that peruses any thing written.

As we must take the care that our words and sense be clear, so if the obscurity happen through the hearers or readers want of understanding, I am not to answer for them. Ben Jonson.

2. One studious in books.

Basil's alters and the dire decrees
Of hard Eusebians, every reader sees. Dryden.

3. One whose office is to read prayers in churches.

He got into orders, and became a reader in parish church at twenty pounds a year. Swift.

READERSHIP. n. f. [from reader.] The office of reading prayers.

When they have taken a degree, they get into orders, and solicit a readership. Swift.

READILY. adv. [from ready.] Expediently; with little hinderance or delay.

My tongue obey'd, and readily could name
Whatever I saw. Milton.

Those very things, which are declined as impossible, are readily practicable in a case of extreme necessity. South.

I readily grant, that one truth cannot contradict another. Locke.

Every one sometime or other dreams that he is reading papers, in which case the invention prompt to reality, that the mind is imposed upon. Spect.

READINESS. n. f. [from ready.]

1. Expedition; promptitude.

He would not forest the readiness of their king in aiding him when the duke of Bretagne failed him. Bacon.

He opens himself to the man of business with reluctance, but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of desire. South.

2. The state of being ready or fit for any thing.

Have you an army ready?

The centurions and their charges already in the entertainment to be on foot at an hour's warning.

I am joyful to hear of their readiness. Shakespeare.

They remained near a month, that they might be in readiness to attend to the motion of the army. Clarendon.

3. Facility; freedom from hinderance or obstruction.

Nature has provided for the readiness and easiness of speech. Holder.

4. State of being willing or prepared.

A pious and well-disposed mind, attended with a readiness to obey the known will of God, is the surest means to enlighten the understanding to a belief of christianity. South.

Their conviction grew so strong, that they embraced the same truths, and laid down their lives, or were always in a readiness to do it, rather than depart from them. Addison.

READMISSION. n. f. [re and admission.]

The act of admitting again.

In an exhausted receiver, animals, that seem as they were dead, revive upon the readmission of fresh air. Aschmole.

To READMIT. v. a. [re and admit.] To let in again.

These evils I deserve,
Yet despair not of his final pardon,
Whose ear is ever open, and his eye
Gracious to readmit the suppliant. Milton.

After twenty minutes I readmitted the air. Deihom.

To READORN. v. a. [re and adorn.] To decorate again; to deck anew.

The streams now change their languid blue,
Regain their glory, and their former renew,
With scarlet honours readorn the tide. Blackmore.

READY. adj. [nab, Saxon; redu, Swedish; hpadu, nimble, Saxon.]

1. Prompt; not delayed.

These commodities yield the readiest money of any in this kingdom, because they never fail of a price abroad. Temple.

He overlook'd his hands; their pay was just
And ready; for he scorn'd to go on trust. Dryden.

2. Fit for a purpose; not to seek.

All things are ready, it om munda be fo,
Perish the man whose mind is backward now! Shakespeare.

Make you ready your stiff bats and clubs;
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle. Shak.

One hand the sword, and one the pen employs,
And in my lap the ready paper lies. Dryden.

The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The heads of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden.

3. Prepared; accommodated to any design, so as that there can be no delay.

Trouble and anguish shall prevail against him, as a king ready to the battle. Job.

Death ready flits to interpose his dart. Milton.

The word which I have given, I'll not revoke;
If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke. Dryden.

The imagination is always restless, and the will, reason being laid aside, is ready for every extravagant project. Locke.

4. Willing; eager; quick.

Men, when their accusations succeed not as they would, are always ready to impute the blame thereof unto the heavens, so as to excuse their own follies. Speiser.

A cloud that is more show than moisture; a cloud that is more ready to bestow his drops upon the sea, than on the land. Holyday.

They who should have helped him to mend things were readier to promote the disorders by which they might thrive, than to let a foot frugality. Davenant.

5. Being at the point; not distant; near; about to do or be.

He knoweth that the day of darkness is ready at hand. Job.

Satan ready now
To stoop with weary'd wings and willing feet
On this world. Milton.

6. Being at hand; next to hand.

A sapling pine he wretch'd from out the ground,
The readiest weapon that his fury found. Dryden.

7. Facile; easy; opportune; near.

Sometimes the readiest way, which a wife man hath to conquer, is to fly. Hooker.

The race elect,
Safe towards Canaan from the fiore advance
Through this wild desert, but the readiest way. Milt.

Proud of their conquest, prouder of their prey,
They leave the camp, and take the readiest way. Dryden.

The ready way to be thought mad, is to contend that you are not so. Speiser.

8. Quick; not done with hesitation.

A ready consent often subjects a woman to contempt. Clarke.

9. Expedite; nimble; not embarrassed, not slow.

Those who speak in publick, are much better accepted, when they can deliver their discourse by the help of a lively genius and a ready memory, than when they are forced to read all

For the most part there is a finer sense, a clearer mind, a readier apprehension, and gentler dispositions in that sex, than in the other. Watts.

10. To make READY. An elliptick expression for, to make things ready. To make preparations.

He will shew you a large upper room; there make ready for us. Mack.

READY. adv. Readily; so as not to need delay.

REAFFIRMANCE. n. f. [re and affirmance.] Second confirmation.

Causes of deprivation are a conviction before the ordinary of the willful maintaining any doctrine contrary to the thirty-nine articles, or a persisting therein without revocation of his error, or a re-affirmance after such revocation. Aylmer.

REAL. adj. [reel, Fr. realis, Lat.]

1. Relating to things, not persons; not personal.

Many are perfect in men's humours, that are not greatly capable of the real part of business, which is the constitution of one that hath studied more than books. Bacon.

2. Not fictitious; not imaginary; true; genuine.

We do but describe an imaginary world, that is but little a-kin to the real one. Gloucester.

When I place an imaginary name at the head of a character, I examine every letter of it, that it may not bear any resemblance to one that is real. Addison.

Imaginary distempers are attended with real and unfeigned sufferings, that enfeeble the body, and dissipate the spirits. Blackmore.

The whole strength of the Arian cause, real or artificial; all that can be of any force either to convince, or deceive a reader. Watts.

3. [In law.] Consisting of things immovable, as land.

I am hastening to convert my small estate, that is personal, into real. Chico.

REALGAR. n. f. A mineral.

Realgar or sandaracha is red arsenick. Harris.

Put realgar hot into the midst of the quicksilver, whereby it may be condensed as well from within as without. Bacon.

REALITY. n. f. [realité, Fr. from real.]

1. Truth; verity; what is, not what merely seems.

I would have them well versed in the Greek and Latin poets, without which a man fancies that he understands a critique, when in reality he does not comprehend his meaning. Addison.

The best accounts of the appearances of nature in any single instance human penetration can reach, comes infinitely short of its reality and internal constitution; for who can search out the Almighty's works to perfection? Chico.

My neck may be an idea to you, but it is a reality to me. Bacon.

2. Something intrinsically important, not merely matter of show.

Of that skill the more thou know'st,
The more she will acknowledge thee her head,
And to realities yield all her shows,
Made so adorn for thy delight the more. Milton.

REA

TO REALIZE. v. a. [realiser, French; from real.]

1. To bring into being or act.

Thus we realize what Archimedes had only in hypothesis, weighing a single grain against the globe of earth. Glanville.

As a diocesan, you are like to exemplify and realize every word of this discourse. South.

2. To convert money into land.

REALLY. adv. [from real.]

1. With actual existence.

We shall at last discover in what persons this holiness is inherent really, in what condition it is inherent perfectly, and consequently in what other sense it may be truly and properly affirmed that the church is holy. Pearson.

There cannot be a more important case of conscience for men to be resolved in, than to know certainly how far God accepts the will for the deed, and how far he does not; and to be informed truly when men do really will a thing, and when they have really no power to do what they have willed. South.

2. In truth; truly; not seemingly only.

Nothing properly is his duty but what is really his interest. Wilkins.

The understanding represents to the will things really evil, under the notion of good. South.

These orators inflame the people, whose anger is really but a short fit of madness. Swift.

They even affect to be more pleased with dress, and to be more fond of every little ornament, than they really are. Law.

3. It is a slight corroboration of an opinion.

REASON. n. f. [raison, French; ratio, Latin.]

1. The power by which man deduces one proposition from another, or proceeds from premises to consequences; the rational faculty; discursive power.

Reason is the director of man's will, discovering in action what is good; for the laws of well-doing are the dictates of right reason. Hooker.

Though breadth that contest and foul, When reason hath to deal with force; yet so. Milton.

Most reason is that reason overcome. Milton.

I appeal to the common judgment of mankind, whether the humane nature be not so framed, as to acquiesce in such a moral certainty, as the nature of things is capable of; and if it were otherwise, whether that reason which belongs to us, would not prove a burden and a torment to us, rather than a privilege, by keeping us in a continual suspense, and thereby rendering our conditions perpetually restless and inquiet. Wilkins.

Dim, as the borrow'd beams of moon and stars To lonely, weary, wand'ring travellers, Is reason to the soul: and as on high, Those rowling fires discover but the sky, Not light us here; so reason's glimmering ray Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way. Dryden.

It would be well, if people would not lay so much weight on their own reason in matters of religion, as to think every thing impossible and absurd, which they cannot conceive: how often do we contradict the right rules of reason in the whole course of our lives? reason itself is true and just, but the reason of every particular man is weak and wavering, perpetually swayed and turned by his interests, his passions, and his vices. Swift.

2. Cause; ground or principle.

What the apostles deemed rational and probable means to that end, there is no reason or probability to think should ever in any produce this effect. Hammond.

Virtue and vice are not arbitrary things, but there is a natural and eternal reason for that goodness and virtue, and against vice and wickedness. Tillotson.

3. Efficient cause.

Spain is thin sown of people, partly by reason of the sterility of the soil, and partly their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon.

Such a benefit, as by the antecedent will of Christ is intended to all men living, though all men, by reason of their own demerits, do not actually receive the fruit of it. White.

The reason of the motion of the balance in a wheel watch, is by the motion of the next wheel. Hale.

By reason of the sickness of a reverend prelate, I have been over-ruled to approach this place. Spratt.

I have not observed equality of numbers in my verse; partly by reason of my haste, but more especially because I would not have my sense a slave to syllables. Dryden.

4. Final cause.

I was proclaim'd on a time,

To have reason for my rhyme:

From that time unto this season,

I receiv'd nor rhyme nor reason. Spenser.

Are you in earnest?

--As and resolv'd what

To do myself this reason and this right. Shakespeare.

The papists ought in reason to allow them all the excuses they make use of for themselves; such as an invincible ignorance, oral tradition and authority. Stillingfleet.

Let it drink deep in thy most vital part;

Strike home, and do me reason in thy heart. Dryden.

9. Reasonable claim; just practice.

God brings good out of evil; and therefore it were but reason we should trust God to govern his own world, and wait till the change cometh, or the reason be discovered. Taylor.

Conscience, not acting by law, is a boundless presumptuous flux; and, for any one by virtue thereof, to challenge himself a privilege of doing what he will, and of being unaccountable, is in all reason too much, either for man or angel. South.

A severe reflection Montaigne has made on princes, that we ought not in reason to have any expectations of favour from them. Dryden.

We have as great assurance that there is a God, as the nature of the thing to be proved is capable of, and as we could in reason expect to have. Tillotson.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments as a thing of that kind is capable of, we ought not in reason to doubt of its existence. Tillotson.

11. Moderation; moderate demands.

The most probable way of bringing France to reason, would be by the making an attempt upon the Spanish West Indies, and by that means to cut off all communication with this great source of riches. Addison.

To REASON. v. n. [raisonner, French.]

1. To argue rationally; to deduce consequences justly from premises.

No man, in the strength of the first grace, can merit the second; for reason they do not, who think so; unless a beggar, by receiving one alms, can merit another. South.

Ideas, as ranked under names, are those that for the most part men reason of within themselves, and always those which they commune about with others. Locke.

Every man's reasoning and knowledge is only about the ideas existing in his own mind; and our knowledge and reasoning about other things is only as they correspond with those our particular ideas. Locke.

Love is not to be reason'd down, or lost In high ambition. Addison.

In the lonely grove,

'Twas there just and good he reason'd strong.

Clear'd some great truth, or rais'd some serious song. Tickell.

2. To debate; to discourse; to talk; to take or give an account. Not in use.

Reason with the fellow,

Before you punish him, where he heard this. Shaksp.

I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,

Who told me in the narrow sea,

There mis'ried a vessel of our country. Shaksp.

Stand still, that I may reason with you of all the righteous acts of the Lord. 1 Samuel.

re and bound.] To spring back; to be reverberated; to fly back in consequence of motion impress'd and resist'd by a greater power.

Whether it were a roaring voice of most savage wild-beasts, or a rebounding echo from the hollow mountains. Wifflom.

It with rebounding surge the bars assail'd. Mil.

Life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly with regard to the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively with regard to what may rebound to ourselves.

Government of the Tongue.
Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: Impenetrability makes them only stop. Newton.

She bounding from the shelvy shore,
Round the descending nymph the waves rebounding roar. Pope.

To REBOUND, v. a.
1. To reverberate; to beat back.

Rebound their sweets from the odoriferous pavement. Prior.

REBOUND, n. f. [from the verb.] The act of flying back in consequence of motion resist'd; restitution.

I do feel,
By the rebound of yours, a grief that floods
My very heart. Shaksp.

If you strike a ball sidelong, not full upon the surface, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resilience in echoes may be tried. Bacon.

The weapon, with unerring fury flew,
At his left shoulder aim'd; nor entrance found;
But back, as from a rock, with swift rebound
Harmless return'd. Dryden.

REBUFF, n. f. [rebuffade, French; rebuffo,

Increase thy care to save the sinking kind;
With greens and flow'rs recruit their empty lives,
And seek fresh force to sustain their lives. Dryd.
Her cheeks glow the brighter, recruiting their colour;
As flowers by sprinkling revive with fresh odour.

Granville.

This fun is set, but see in bright array
What hosts of heavenly lights recruit the day!
Love in a shining galaxy appears Triumphant full.

Granville.

Seeing the variety of motion, which we find in the world is always decreasing, there is a necessity of confering and recruiting it by active principles;
such as are the cause of gravity, by which plants and comets keep their motions in their orbits, and bodies acquire great motion in falling. Newton.

2. To supply an army with new men.

He suited the call of Holland with the command of that army, with which he was to be recruited and assisted. Clarendon.

But a firm body of embattel'd men. Dryden.

RECTANGLE, n. f. [rectangle, French; rectangulus, Latin.] A figure which has one angle or more of ninety degrees.

All Athens should decree, that in rectangle triangles the square, which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration. Brown.

The mathematician considers the truth and properties belonging to a rectangle, only as it is in idea in his own mind. Locke.

RECTANGULAR, adj. [rectangulaire, Fr.
rectus and angulus, Lat.] Right angled;
having angles of ninety degrees.

Bricks moulded in their ordinary rectangular form, if they shall be laid one by another in a level row between any supporters sustaining the two ends, then all the pieces will necessarily sink. Watson.

RECTANGULARLY, adv. [from rectangular.] With right angles.

At the equator, the needle will stand rectangularly; but approaching northward toward the tropics, it will regard the pole obliquely. Brown.

RECTIFIABLE, adj. [from rectify.] Cap-

1. To make right; to reform; to redress.

That wherein unfounder times have done ains,
the better ages ensuing must rectify as they may. Hooker.

It shall be bootless

That longer you defer the court, as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is untitled in the king. Shakspeare.

Where a long course of piety has purged the heart, and rectified the will, knowledge will break in upon such a soul, like the sun shining in his full might. South.

The substance of this theory I mainly depend on,
being willing to suppose that many particularities
may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet.

If those men of parts, who have been employed in vitiating the age, had endeavoured to rectify and amend it, they need not have sacrificed their good sense to their fame. Addison.

The false judgments he made of things are owned; and the methods pointed out by which he rectified them. Atterbury.

2. To exalt and improve by repeated dis- tillation.

The skin hath been kept white and smooth for above fifteen years, by being included with recti-fied spirit of wine in a cylindrical glass. Cruet.

RECTILINEAR, adj. [rectus and linea, RECTILINEOUS, } Lat.] Consisting of right lines.

There are only three rectilineal and ordinate figures, which can serve to this purpose; and mordinate or unlike ones must have been not only less elegant, but unequal. Ray.

This image was oblong and not oval, but terminated with two rectilinear and parallel sides and two semicircular ends. Newton.

The rays of light, whether they be very small bodies projected, or only motion and force propagated, are moved in right lines; and whenever a ray of light is by any obstacle turned out of its rectilinear way, it will never return into the same rectilinear way, unless perhaps by very great accident. Newton.

RECTITUDE, n. f. [rectitude, Fr. from rectus, Lat.]

1. Straightness; not curvity.

The red Dutch currant yields a rich juice, to be diluted with a quantity of water boiled with refined sugar. Morimer.

2. To make elegant; to polish; to make accurate.

Queen Elizabeth's time was a golden age for a world of refined wits, who honoured poetry with their pens. Peachment.

Love refines the thoughts, and hush his feat
In reason. Milton.

The same traditional fash, which renders the bodies of children, born from wealthy parents, weak, may perhaps refine their spirits. Swift.

TO REFINE. v. n.

1. To improve in point of accuracy or delicacy.

Chaucer refined on Boccaccio, and mended his stories. Dryden.

Let a lord but own the happy lines;
How the wit brightens, how the taste refines! Pope.

2. To grow pure.

The pure lapsed stream, when foul with stains,
Works itself clear, and as it runs refines. Addison.

3. To affect nicely.

He makes another paragraph about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer still to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

REFINEMENT. n. s. [from refine.] With affected elegance.

Will any dog
Refinedly leave his bitches and his bones
To turn a wheel? Dryden.

REFINEMENT. n. s. [from refine.]

1. The act of purifying, by clearing any thing from dross and recrementitious matter.

2. The state of being pure.

The more bodies are of kin to spirit in subtilty and refinement, the more diffusible are they. Norris.

3. Improvement in elegance or purity.

From the civil war to this time, I doubt whether the corruptions in our language have not equalled its refinements. Swift.

The religion of the gospel is only the refinement and exaltation of our best faculties. Law.

4. Artificial practice.

The rules religion prescribes are more successful in public and private affairs, than the refinements of irregular cunning. Rogers.

5. Affeculation of elegant improvement.

The flats about town had a design to leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Addison.

REFINER. n. s. [from refine.]

1. Purifier; one who clears from dross or recrement.

The furnaces of iron observe, that that iron stone is hardest to melt, which is fullest of metal; and that easiest, which hath most dross. Bacon.

2. Improver in elegance.

As they have been to great refiners of our language, so it hath been my chief ambition to imitate them. Swift.

3. Inventor of superfluous subtilties.

No man is less of the truth of things, than these great refiners and vacillants, who are to wonderfully subtle, and over-subtle their conceivings. Swift.

TO REFIN. v. a. [refait, Fr. re and fin.]

To repair; to restore after damage.

He will not allow that there are any such signs of art in the make of the present globe, or that there was so great care taken in the refitting of it up again at the deluge.

Permit our ships a shelter on your shores,
Rejoiced from your woods with planks and oars.

TO REFLECT. v. a. [reflehir, Fr. reflécir, Lat.] To throw back.

We, his gather'd beams
Reflected, may with matter's fire be tamed. Milton.
Lodges close together reflect their own colour. Dryden.

TO REFLECT. v. n.

1. To throw back light.

In dead men's tombs, and in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in form of eyes, reflecting gems. Shakspeare.

2. To bend back.

Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, and never reflects in an angle, nor bends in a circle, which is a continual reflection, unless either by some external impulse, or by an intrinsic principle of gravity. Bentley.

3. To throw back the thoughts upon the past or on themselves.

The imagination casts thoughts in our way, and forces the understanding to reflect upon them.

In every action reflect upon the end, and in your understanding it, consider why you do it. Taylor.
Who hath, who could such ill events expect?
With shame on his own counsel, doth reflect. Denham.

When men are grown up, and reflect on their own minds, they cannot find any thing more ancient there, than those opinions which were taught them before their memory began to keep a register of their actions. Locke.

It is hard, that any part of my hand should be setled upon one who has used me to ill, and yet I could not see a spring of any bough of this whole walk of trees, but I should reflect upon her and her severity. Spectator.

Let the king dismiss his woes,
Reflecting on her fair rengaun;
And take the cypress from his brows,
To put his wonted laurels on. Prior.

4. To consider attentively.

Into myself my reason's eye I turn'd;
And as I much reflected, much I mourn'd. Prior.

5. To throw reproach or censure.

Neither do I reflect in the least upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation. Swift.

6. To bring reproach.

Errors of wives reflect on husbands still. Dryden.

REFLECTANT. adj. [reflécens, Lat.] Bending back; flying back.

The ray descendent, and the ray reflectant, flying with so great a speed, that the air between them cannot take a formal play any way, before the beams of the light be on both sides of it; it follows, that, according to the nature of humid things, it must first only swell. Digby.

REFLECTION. n. f. [from reflect: thence I think reflexion less proper: reflexion, Fr. reflexus, Latin.]

1. The act of throwing back.

The eye sees not itself,
But by reflection from other things. Shakspeare.
If the sun's light consisted but of one sort of rays, there would be but one colour, and it would be impossible to produce any new by reflections or refractions. Cheyne.

2. The act of bending back.

Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, nor ever reflects in an angle or circle, which is a continual reflection, unless by some external impulse. Bentley.

3. That which is reflected.

She shines not upon souls, lest the reflection should hurt her. Shakspeare.
As the sun in water we can bear,
Yet not the sun, but his reflection there.

So let us view her here, in what she was,
And take her image in this wat'ry glass. Dryden.

4. Thought thrown back upon the past, or the absent, on itself.

The three first parts I dedicate to my old friends, to take off those melancholy reflections, which the sense of age, infirmity, and death may give them. Denham.

This dreadful image so possess'd her mind,
She ceas'd all farther hope; and now began
To make reflection on the unhappy man. Dryden.
Job's reflections on his once flourishing estate, did at the same time afflict and encourage him. Atterbury.

What wounding reproaches of soul must he feel,
From the reflections on his own ingratitude. Rogers.

5. The action of the mind upon itself.

Reflection is the perception of the operations of our own minds within us, as it is employed about the ideas it has got. Locke.

6. Attentive consideration.

This delight grows and improves under thought and reflection; and while it exercises, does also endear itself to the mind; at the same time employing and inflaming the meditations. South.

7. Censure.

He said; and oh! may no reflection shed
Its poisonous venom on the royal head. Prior.

REFLECTIVE. adj. [from reflect.]

1. Throwing back images.

When the weary king gave place to night,
His beams lie to his royal brother lent,
And to those fill in his reflective light. Dryden.
In the reflective stream the shining blade,
Viewing her charms impair'd, abash'd shall hide
Her purple head. Prior.

2. Considering things past; considering the operations of the mind.

Fore'd by reflective reason I confess,
That human science is uncertain guess. Prior.

REFLECTOR. n. f. [from reflect.] Considerer.

There is scarce any thing that nature has made, or that men do suffer, whence the devout reflector cannot take an occasion of an inspiring meditation. Boyle.

REFLEX. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Directed backward.

The motions of my mind are as obvious to the reflex act of the soul, or the turning of the intellectual eye inward upon its own actions, as the passions of my sense are obvious to my sense; I see the object, and I perceive that I see it. Hale.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernible ends of them to exercise a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship, not of blind mechanism or blunder chance, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.

REFLEX. n. f. [reflexus, Lat.] Reflection.

There was no other way for angels to sin, but by reflect of their understandings upon themselves. Hooker.

I'll say you gray is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shakspeare.

REFLEXIBILITY. n. f. [from reflexible.]

The quality of being reflexible.

Reflexibility of rays is their disposition to be reflected or turned back into the same medium from any other medium, upon whose surface they fall, and rays are more or less reflexible, which are turned back more or less easily. Newton.

REFLEXIBLE. adj. [from reflexus, Lat.] Having respect to something past.

That assurance reflexive cannot be a divine faith, but at the most an human, yet such as perhaps I may have no doubting mixed with. Hammond.

REFLEXIVELY. adv. [from reflexive.] In a backward direction.

Solomon tells us life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly in respect of the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively also in respect of what may rebound to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

REFLOAT. n. f. [re and float.] Club, reflux.

The main float and refloat of the sea, is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon.

TO REFLOURISH. v. a. [re and flourish.] To flourish anew.

Virtue given for lost
Revives, rejoyceth with it, then vigorous most,
When most unactive deem'd. Milton.

TO REFLOW. v. n. [refluer, Fr. re and flow.] To flow back.

REFLUENT. adj. [refluens, Lat.] Running back; flowing back.

The liver receives the refluxent blood almost from all the parts of the abdomen. Arbuthnot.

Tell, by what paths,
Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys
The refluxent rivers, and the land repays. Blackmore.

REFLUX. n. f. [reflux, Fr. refluxus, Lat.] Backward course of water.

Reflexes
Mine own that 'bide upon me, all from me
Shall with a fierce reflux on me rebound. Milton.

The variety of the flux and reflux of Purpus, whether the same do ebb and flow seven times a day, is inconvertible. Brown.

REFUGILLATION. n. f. [refugillo, Lat.] Restoration of strength by refreshment.

TO REFORM. v. a. [reformo, Lat. reformer, Fr.] To change from worse to better.

A sect in England, following the very same rule of policy, seeketh to reform even the French reformation, and purge out from thence all dregs of popery. Hooker.

Seat worthier of Gods, was built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old. Milton.

May no such storm
Fall on our times, where from most reform. Denham.

Now low'ring looks preface approaching wars,
And now prevailing love her face returns. Dryden.

One cannot attempt the perfect reformation of the languages of the world, without rendering them ridiculous. Locke.

The example alone of a vicious prince will corrupt usage; but that of a good one will not only reform it.

TO REFORM. v. n. To pass by change from worse to better.

Was his doctrine of the mass struck out in the conflict? or did it give him occasion of reformation in this point? Atterbury.

REFORM. n. f. [Fr.] Reformation.

REFORMATION. n. f. [reformation, Fr. from reform.]

1. Change from worse to better: commonly used of human manners.

Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scow'ring faults;
Nor over Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, as in this king. Shakspeare.

Satire lasses vice into reformation. Dryden.

The pagan converts mention this great reformation of those who had been the greatest sinners with that sudden and surprising change, which the christian religion made in the lives of the most prodigal.

2. [By way of eminence.] The change of religion from the corruptions of popery to its primitive state.

The burden of the reformation lay on Luther's shoulders. Atterbury.

REFORMER. n. f. [from reform.]

1. One who makes a change for the better; an amender.

Publick reformers had need first practice that on their own hearts, which they purpose to try on others. King Charles.

REF

The complaint is more general, than the endeavours to redress it: abroad every man would be a reformer, how very few at home! Spratt.

It was honour enough, to behold the English churches, reformed; that is, delivered from the reformers. South.

One of those who changed religion from popish corruptions and innovations. Our best reformers were famous confessors and martyrs all over the world. Bacon.

REFRACT. v. a. [refractus, Latin.] To break the natural course of rays.

If its angle of incidence be large, and the refractive power of the medium not very strong to throw it far from the perpendicular, it will be refracted. Cheyne.

Rays of light are urged by the refracting media. Cheyne.

Refracted from von eastern cloud, The grand ethereal bow shoots up. Thomson.

REFRACTION. n. f. [refraction, Fr.]

Refraction, in general, is the incurvation or change of determination in the body moved, which happens to it whilst it enters or penetrates any medium: in dioptricks, it is the variation of a ray of light from that right line, which it would have pursued on, had not the density of the medium varied it aside. Harris.

Refraction, out of the rarer medium into the denser, is made towards the perpendicular. Newton.

REFRACTIVE. adj. [from refract.] Having the power of refraction.

Those superficies of transparent bodies reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power; that is, which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities. Newton.

REFRACTORINESS. n. f. [from refractory.] Sullen obstinacy.

I did never allow any man's refractoriness against the privileges and orders of the houses. K. Charles. Great complaint was made by the prebendaries, of my refractoriness to obey the parliament's will. Saunders.

REFRACTORY. adj. [refractorius, Fr. refractorius, Lat. and so should be written refractory.] It is now accented on the first syllable, but by Shakespeare on the second. [Obstinate; perverse; contumacious.]

There is a law in each well-order'd nation, To curb those raging appetites that are At disobedient and refractory. Shakespeare.

A rough brawn'd swain, being brought before a wide justice for some misdemeanour, was by him ordered to be sent away to prison, and was refractory after he heard his doom, inasmuch as he would not put a foot from the place where he stood; saying, it was better to stand, where he was, than go to a worse place. Bacon.

Anger compliance with any illegal and extravagant ways, like violent motions in nature, soon grows weary of itself, and ends in a refractory turbulence. King Charles.

Refractory martial! if thou wilt not trust thy hands, take what follows; know assuredly, before next full moon, that thou wilt be hung up in chains. Arbutnot.

These atoms of theirs may have it in them, but they are refractory and sullen; and therefore, like to a of the same temper, must be banged and battered into reason. Bentley.

REFRAGABLE. adj. [refragabilis, Lat.] Capable of confutation and conviction.

REFRAIN. v. a. [refrainer, Fr. re and frenum, Lat.] To hold back; to keep from action.

Hold not thy tongue, O God, keep not still silence; refrain not thyself. Psalms.

My son, walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path. Proverbs.

Not from the holy one of heav'n's Refrain'd his tongue. Milton.

Refrain'd, his wrath shall now refrain, On what the furies of the gods in vain. Pope.

REFRAIN. v. w. To forbear; to abstain; to spare.

REF

In what place, or upon what consideration soever it be, they do it, were it in their own opinion of no force being done, they would undoubtedly refrain to do it. Hawker.

For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off. Isaiah.

That they fed not on flesh, at least the faithful party before the flood, may become more probable, because they refrained therefrom some time after. Brown.

REFRANGIBILITY. n. f. [from refrangible.]

Refrangibility of the rays of light, is their disposition to be refracted or turned out of their way, in passing out of one transparent body or medium into another. Newton.

REFRANGIBLE. adj. [re and frango, Latin.]

As some rays are more refrangible than others; that is, are more turn'd out of their course, in passing from one medium to another, it follows, that after such refraction, they will be separated, and their distinct colour observed. Lake.

REFRENA'ION. n. f. [re and frango, Lat.] The act of restraining.

To REFRESH. v. a. [refraischer, French; refrigero, Latin.]

1. To recreate; to relieve after pain, fatigue, or want.

Service shall with steel'd sinews toil; And labour shall refresh it with hope. Shaksp.

After his studies, or his usual pain. Shakspere.

Second to thee, offered himself to die
For man's offence. Milton.

We must learn to be deaf and regardless of other things, besides the present subject of our meditation. Watts.

REGENCY, n. f. [from regent.]

1. Authority; government.

As Christ took manhood, that by it he might be capable of death, whereunto he humbly himself;
so because manhood is the proper subject of compassion and feeling pity, which maketh the scepter of Christ's regency even in the kingdom of heaven actual. Hooker.

Men have knowledge and strength to fit them for action: women affection, for their better compliance; and herewith beauty to compensate their inflection, by giving them an equivalent regency over men. Greene.

2. Vicarious government.

This great minister, finding the regency shaken by the action of so many great ones within,
and by the terror of the Spanish greatness without,
durst begin a war. Temple.

About the sun of this east of Desmond, who lost his head, were restored to the earldom; yet could not the king's grace regenerate obedience in that degenerate house, but it grew rather more wild.
Davies.

Through all the soil a genial ferment spreads,
Regenerates the plants, and new adorns the meads
Blackmore.

An alkali, poured to that which is mixed with an acid, raises an effervescence, at the cessation of which, the salts, of which the acid is composed, will be regenerated. Arbutnot.

2. To make to be born anew; to renew by

REG

change of carnal nature to a christian life.

No sooner was a convert initiated, but by an easy figure he became a new man, and both acted and looked upon himself as one regenerated, and born a second time into another state of existence. Addison.

REGENERATE, adj. [regeneratus, Latin.]

1. Reproduced.

Thou! the earthly author of my blood,
Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,
Doth with a twofold vigour hit me up
To reach at victory. Shakespeare.

2. Born anew by grace to a christian life.

For from the mercy-seat above,
Prevenient grace descending, had remov'd
The stony from their hearts, and made new flesh
Regenerate grow instead. Milton.

If you fulfil this resolution, though you fall sometimes by infirmity; nay, though you should fall into some greater act, even of deliberate sin, which you presently retract by confession and amendment, you are nevertheless in a regenerate estate, you live the life of a christian here, and shall inherit the reward that is promised to such in a glorious immortality hereafter. Wake.

REGICIDE, n. f. [regicida, Latin.]

1. Murderer of his king.

I through the mazes of the bloody field,
Hunted your sacred life; which that I mist'd
Was the propitious error of my fate,
Not of my soul, my soul's a regicide. Dryden.

2. [regicidium, Latin.] Murder of his king.

Were it not for this amulet, how were it possible for any to think they may venture upon perjury, sacrilege, murder, regicide, without impending to their faultship? Decay of Piety.

Did fate or we, when great Atreides dy'd,
Urge the bold traitor to the regicide? Pope.

REGIMEN, n. f. [Latin.] That care in diet and living, that is suitable to every particular course of medicine, or state of body.

Yet should some neighbour feel a pain,
Just in the parts where I complain,

REG

How many a message would he send?
What hearty prayers, that I should mend?

Enquire what regimen I kept,
What gave me ease, and how I slept? Swift.

REGIMENT, n. f. [regiment, old French.]

1. Established government; polity; mode of rule. Not in use.

We all make complaint of the iniquity of our times, not unjustly, for the days are evil; but compare them with those times wherein there were no civil societies, with those times wherein there was as yet no manner of publick regiment established, and we have surely good cause to think, that God hath blessed us exceedingly. Hooker.

The corruption of our nature being presupposed, we may not deny, but that the law of nature doth now require of necessity some kind of regiment.

They utterly damn their own confessorian regi- ment, for the same can neither be proved by any literal texts of holy scripture, nor yet by necessary inference out of scripture. White.

2. Rule; authority. Not in use.

The regiment of the soul over the body, is the regi- ment of the more active part over the passive. Hale.

3. [regiment, French.] A body of soldiers under one colonel.

Higher to the plain we'll set forth,
In best appointment, all our regiments. Shakespeare.

The elder did whole regiments afford,
The younger brought his conduct and his sword. Waller.

The standing regiments, the fort, the town,
All but this wicked filer are our own. Waller.

Now thy and
Eugene, with regiments unequal prest, Awaits. Philips.

Of late most hard achievement by you done,
For which enrolled is your glorious name
In heavenly registers above the sun. Spenser.

Sir John, as you have one eye upon my foibles, as you hear them untold, turn another into the register of your own. Shakespeare.

This island, as appears by faithful registers of those times, had ships of great content.
Of these experiments, our friend, pointing at the register of the dialogue, will perhaps give you a more particular account. Hayle.

For a conspiracy against the emperor Claudius,
it was ordered that Scribonianus's name and con-sulate should be effaced out of all publick registers and inscriptions. Addison.

2. [registrarius, law Latin.] The officer

All being forced unto fluent consistencies, naturally regress into their former solidities. Brown.

REGRESSION. n. f. [regressus, Lat.] The act of returning or going back.

To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwith their own being, which must needs be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them, and restrains from regression into nothing. Brown.

REGRET. n. f. [regret, Fr. regretto, Italian.]

1. Vexation at something past; bitterness of reflection.

I never bare any touch of conscience with greater regret.

King Charles.

A passionate regret at sin, a grief and sadness at its memory, enters us into God's roll of mourners.

Decay of Piety.

Though sin offers itself in never so pleasing a drel, yet the remorse and inward regret of the soul, upon the communion of it, infinitely overabundance those faint gratifications it affords the senses. South.

2. Grief; sorrow.

Never any prince expressed a more lively regret for the loss of a servant, than his majesty did for this great man; in all offices of grace towards his servants, and in a wonderful solicitous care for the payment of his debts.

Clarendon.

That freedom, which all sorrows claim,

She does for thy content resign;

Her piety itself would blame,

If her regrets should waken thine.

Prior.

3. Dislike; aversion. Not proper.

Is it a virtue to have some ineffective regrets to damnation, and such a virtue too, as shall balance all our vices?

Decay of Piety.

TO REGRET. v. a. [regretter, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To repent; to grieve at.

I shall not regret the trouble my experiments cost me, if they be found serviceable to the purposes of respiration.

Calmly he look'd on either life, and here saw nothing to regret, or there to fear;

From nature's temple feast his satisfy'd,

Thank'd heav'n that he had liv'd and that he dy'd.

Pope.

2. To be uneasy at. Not proper.

Those, the impiety of whole hives makes them regret a duty, and secretly with there were none, will greedily listen to atheistical notions. Glanville.

REGURDON. n. f. [re and gurdon.] Reward; recompense.

Stoop, and let your knee against my foot;

And in regurdon of that duty done,

I gird thee with the valiant sword of York.

Shakspeare.

TO REGURDON. v. a. [from the noun.]

To reward. The verb and noun are both obsolete.

Long since we were resolved of your truth, Your faithful service and your toil in war;

Yet never have you tasted your reward,

Or been regurdon'd with so much as thanks.

Shakspeare.

REGULAR. adj. [regulier, Fr. regularis, Latin.]

1. Agreeable to rule; consistent with the mode prescribed.

The common cant of critics is, that though the lines are good, it is not a regular piece. Guardian.

The ways of heav'n are dark and intricate; Puzled in mazes, and perplex'd with errors,

Our understanding traces them in vain,

Lost and bewild'rd in the fruitless search;

REG

Nor sees with how much art the windings run, Nor where the regular confusion ends. Addis.

So when we view some well-proportion'd dome, No monstrous height or breadth or length appear;

The whole at once is bold and regular. Pope.

2. Governed by strict regulations.

So just thy skill, to regular my rage

Pope.

Not only simple ideas and substances, but modes, are positive beings; though the parts of which they consist, are very often relative one to another. Locke.

2. Considered not absolutely, but as belonging to, or respecting something else.

Though capable it be not of inherent holiness, yet it is often relative. Hobbes.

The ecclesiastical, as well as the civil government, has cause to pursue the same methods of confirming itself; the grounds of government being founded upon the same bottom of nature in both, though the circumstances and relative considerations of the persons may differ. South.

Every thing sustains both an absolute and a relative capacity: an absolute, as it is such a thing, endowed with such a nature; and a relative, as it is part of the universe, and so stands in such relation to the whole.

REL

South.
Wholesome and unwholesome are relative, not real qualities.
Arbutnot.

Particular; positive; close in connection. Not in use.
I'll have grounds
More relative than this.

Shakespeare.

RELATIVE. n. f.

Fill.

2. Pronoun answering to an antecedent.
Term the right joining of substantives with adjectives and the relative with the antecedent.
Aeschylus.

3. Somewhat respecting something else.
When the mind so considers one thing, that it fits it by another, and carries its view from one to the other, this is relation and respect; and the denominations given to positive things, intimating that respect, are relatives.
Locke.

RELATIVELY. adv. [from relative.] As it respects something else; not absolutely.
All those things, that seem so foul and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively.
More.

These being the greatest good or the greatest evil, either absolutely so in themselves, or relatively to us, it is therefore good to be zealously affected for the one against the other.
Spratt.

Consider the absolute affections of any being as it is in itself, before you consider it relatively, or survey the various relations in which it stands to other beings.
Watts.

RELATIVENESS. n. f. [from relative.]
The state of having relation.
RELAX. v. a. [relaxo, Lat.]

To slacken; to make less tense.
The flowers, when the southern wind bloweth, are more relaxed.
Bacon.

Adm. amazed,
Mourning flood, and black, while horror chill
Runs through his veins, and all his joints relax'd.
Milton.

To remit; to make less severe or rigorous.
The statute of mortmain was at several times relaxed by the legislature.
Swift.

Not please relax, nor difficulty fright.
Vanity of Wishes.

To ease; to divert; as, conversation relaxes the student.
To open; to loose.
If serv'd not to relax their ferried files.
Milton.

RELAX. v. n. To be mild; to be remiss; to be not rigorous.
The tone regards the close
Of poor Paolo in too close;
Which he relax'd again,
Of govern'd with a looser rein.
Prior.

RELAXATION. n. f. [relaxation, French; relaxatio, Latin.]
Immersion of tension; the act of relaxing.
Of these are many times mortal; for that they carry a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits.
Bacon.

Nay, who live healthy in a dry air, fall into all relaxations that depend upon relaxation in a moist Arbutnot.

Cessation of restraint.
The sea is not higher than the land, as some say the sea flood up on heap higher than the land, and at the deluge a relaxation being made, renewed the land.
Burnet.

RELAXATION; abatement of rigour.
The chairman y grants, by common consent of the whole senate, under their town seal, a relaxation to one Berthier, whom the eldership had excommunicated.
Hooker.

REL

The relaxation of the statute of mortmain, is one of the reasons which gives the bishop terrible apprehensions of popery coming on us.
Swift.

4. Remission of attention or application.
As God has not devoted our bodies to toil, but that he allows us some recreation: so doubtless he indulges the same relaxation to our minds.
Government of the Tongue.

There would be no business in solitude, nor proper relaxations in business.
Addison.

RELAX. v. n. f. [relaxo, Fr.] Horses on the road to relieve others.
To RELAX. v. a. [relaxo, French.]

1. To set free from confinement or servitude.
Pilate said, whom will ye that I release unto you?
Matthew.

You relax'd his courage, and set free
A valour fatal to the enemy.
Dryden.

Why should a reasonable man put it into the power of fortune to make him miserable, when his ancestors have taken care to release him from her?
Dryden.

2. To set free from pain.
3. To free from obligation, or penalty.
Too secure, because from death relax'd some days.
Milton.

4. To quit; to let go.
Every creditor that lendeth ought unto his neighbour shall release it.
Deuteronomy.

He had been base, had he relax'd his right,
For such an empire none but kings should fight.
Dryden.

5. To relax; to slacken. Not in use.
It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be relax'd, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof.
Hooker.

RELAX. v. n. f. [relaxo, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Dimission from confinement, servitude, or pain.
2. Relaxation of a penalty.
O fatal search! in which the lab'ring mind,
Still press'd with weight of woe, still hopes to find
A shadow of delight, a dream of peace,
From years of pain, one moment of release.
Prior.

3. Remission of a claim.
The king made a great feast, and made a release to the provinces, and gave gifts.
Esther.

The king would not have one penny abated, of what had been granted by parliament; because it might encourage other counties to pray the like release or mitigation.
Bacon.

4. Acquittance from a debt signed by the creditor.
To RELEGATE. v. a. [relego, French; relego, Latin.] To banish; to exile.

RELEGATION. n. f. [relegation, Fr. relegatio, Lat.] Exile; judicial banishment.
According to the civil law, the extraordinary punishment of adultery was deportation or relegation.
Aristotle.

To RELIANT. v. n. [relentir, French.]

1. To soften; to grow less rigid or hard; to give.
In some houses, sweet salts will relent more than in others.
Bacon.

In that soft season, when descending flows
Call forth the greens, and wake the rising flows;
When open buds salute the welcome day,
And earth relenting feels the genial ray.
Pope.

2. To melt; to grow moist.
Crows seem to call upon rain, which is but the comfort they seem to receive in the relenting of the air.
Bacon.

Salt of tartar, brought to fusion, and placed in a cellar, will, in a few minutes, begin to relent, and have its surface softened by the insubstantial moisture of the air, which, if it be left long, it will at last be dissolved.
Pelle.

All nature mourns, the skies relent in showers,
Mild dews are the birds, and clos'd the drooping flows;
If Delia smile, the flowers begin to spring,
The skies to brighten, and the birds to sing.
Pope.

REL

3. To grow less intense.
I have marked in you a relenting truly, and a slackening of the main career, you had so nobly begun, and almost performed.
Sydney.

The workmen let glass cool by degrees in such relentings of fire, as they call their relenting heats, lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of an Digby.

4. To soften in temper; to grow tender; to feel compassion.
Can you behold
My tears, and not once relent?
Shakespeare.

I'd not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors.
Shakespeare.

Undoubtedly he will relent, and turn
From his displeasure.
Milton.

He sung, and he consented
To hear the poet's prayer;
Stern Proserpine relent'd,
And gave him back the sun.

To RELIANT. v. a.

1. To slacken; to remit. Obsolete.
Apace he shot, and yet he fled apace,
And oftentimes he would relent his pace,
That him his foe more fiercely should pursue.
Spenser.

2. To soften; to mollify. Obsolete.
Air hated earth, and water hated fire,
Till love relent'd then rebellious he.
Spenser.

RELIENTLESS. adj. [from relent.]

1. Unpitiful; unmoved by kindness or tenderness.
For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire.
Dryden.

Why should the weeping hero now Relentless to their wishes prove?
Prior.

2. In Milton, it perhaps signifies unremitted; intently fixed upon disquieting objects.
Only in destroying, I find unto
To my relentless thoughts.

RELIANCE. n. f. [from rely.] Trust; dependence; confidence; repose of mind; with on before the object of trust.
His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fructed dates
Has lost my credit.
Shakespeare.

That pellucid gelatinous substance, which he pitches upon with great reliance and positiveness, is chiefly of animal constitution.
Woodward.

He secured and encreased his prosperity, by an humble behaviour towards God, and a dutiful reliance on his providence.
Atterbury.

They afforded a sufficient confirmation of this truth, and a firm reliance on the promises contained in it.
Rogers.

Religion in death, and reliance on the divine mercies, give comfort to the friends of the dying.
Clarissa.

Misfortunes often reduce us to a better reliance, than that we have been accustomed to fix upon.
Clarissa.

RELICK. n. f. [reliquie, Lat. relique, Fr.]

1. That which remains; that which is left after the loss or decay of the rest. It is generally used in the plural.
Up dreary dunes of darkness's queen,
Gather up the reliques of thy race,
Or else go thou average.
Spenser.

Shall we go to the relics of this town?
Shakespeare.

The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques
Of her decreaten faith are bound to Diomedes.
Shakespeare.

Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains,
Parting a narrow ditch from the foul remains;
The relics of inordinate vice they wear,
And spots of sin.
Dryden.

2. It is often taken for the body deserted by the soul.

What needs my Shakespear for his honour'd bones,
The labour of an age in piled stones?
Or that his hallow'd reliques should be hid
Under a starry-pointed pyramid? Milton.
In peace, ye shades of our great grandfathers, rest,
Eternal spring, and rising flow'rs adorn
The reliques of each venerable urn. Dryden.
Shall our reliques second birth receive?
Sleep we to wake, and only die to live? Prior.
Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
And sacred place by Dryden's awful dusk;
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes. Pope.
3. That which is kept in memory of another, with a kind of religious veneration.
Cows's letter'd into rags, then reliques leaves
The sport of winds. Milton.
This church is very rich in reliques; among the rest, they show a fragment of Thomas à Becket, as indeed there are very few treasures of reliques in Italy, that have not a tooth or a bone of this saint.
Adijon.

RELICKS. adv. [from relicks] In the manner of reliques. A word not used, nor elegantly formed.

Thirty wench scrapes kitchen stuff,
And barreling the droppings and the tuff
Of waning candles, which in thirty year
Relicks kept, perhaps buys wedding cheer. Daunce.
RELIC. n. f. [relicte, old French; relictus, Latin.] A widow; a wife desolate by the death of her husband.

If the fathers and husbands were of the household of faith, then certainly their relics and children cannot be strangers in this household. Spratt.
Charles relict!

Honour'd on earth, and worthy of the love
Of such a spouse as now resides above. Garth.

RELIEF. n. f. [relief, French.]

1. Alleviation of calamity; mitigation of pain or sorrow.

Thoughts in my unquiet breast are risen,
Tending to some relief of our extremes. Milton.

2. That which frees from pain or sorrow.
He found his dejected present would be a relief, and when he thought it an impertinence to consider what it could be called besides. Pill.
So should we make our death a glad relief
From future shame. Dejden.

Nor dar'd I to presume, that pres'd with grief,
My slight should urge you to this due relief,
Stay, stay your steps. Dryden.

3. Dismission of a sentinel from his post.
For this relief, much thanks; 'tis bitter cold,
And I am sick at heart. Shakespeare.

4. [releivum, law Lat.] Legal remedy of wrongs.

5. The prominence of a figure in stone or metal; the seeming prominence of a picture.

The figures of many ancient coins rise up in a much more beautiful relief than those of the modern; the face sinking by degrees in the fiver'd declensions of the empire, till about Constantine's time, it lies almost even with the surface of the medal. Adijon.

Not with such majesty, such bold relief,
The forms august of kings, or conqu'ring chief,
E'er swell'd on marble, as in verse have thine;
In polish'd verse, the manners, and the mind. Pope.

6. The exposure of any thing, by the proximity of something different.

RELIEVABLE. adj. [from relieve.] Capable of relief.

Neither can they, as to reparation, hold plea of things, wherein the party is relievable by common law. Hale.

TO RELIEVE. v. a. [relevo, Lat. relever, French.]

1. To ease pain or sorrow.

2. To succour by assistance.

I am thy grov'ling there,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor;
A pittance of my hand will let him free. Dryden.

3. To set a sentinel at rest, by placing another on his post.

Honest soldier, who hath relieved you?
— Bernardo has my place, give you good night. Shakespeare.

Relieve the centuries that have watch'd all night,
Dryden.

4. To right by law.

5. To recommend by the interposition of something dissimilar.

As the great lamp of day,
Through different regions does his course pursue,
And leaves one world but to revive a new;
While, by a pleasing change, the queen of night
Relieves his lustre with a milder light. Stepany.

Since the incalculating precept upon precept will prove tedious, the poet must not encumber his poem with too much business; but sometimes reluctantly the subject with a moral reflection. Adijon.

6. To support; to assist; to recommend to attention.

Parallels, or like relations, alternately relieve each other; when neither will pass unaided, yet are they plausible together. Brown.

RELIEVER. n. f. [from relieve.] One that relieves.

He is the protector of his weakness, and the reliever of his want. Rogers.

RELIEVO. n. f. [Italian.] The prominence of a figure or picture.

A convex mirror makes the objects in the middle come out from the superficies; the painter must do so in respect of the lights and shadows of his figures, to give them more relievo and more flame; th.
Dryden.

TO RELIGHT. v. a. [re and light.] To light anew.

His power can heal me, and relight my eye. Pope.

RELIGION. n. f. [religion, Fr. religio,
Latin.]

1. Virtue, as founded upon reverence of God, and expectation of future rewards and punishments.

He that is void of fear, may soon be just,
And no religion binds men to be traitors. B. Joof
One speaks much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace
And judgment from above. Milton.

By religion, I mean that general habit of reverence towards the divine nature, whereby we are enabled and inclined to worship and serve God after such a manner as we conceive most agreeable to his will, to as to procure his favour and blessing. With.

If we consider it as directed against God, it is a breach of religion; if as to men, it is an offence against morality. South.

By her inform'd, we best religion learn,
Its glorious object by her and discern. Blackmore.

Religion or virtue, in a large sense, includes duty to God and our neighbour; but in a proper sense, virtue signifies duty towards men, and religion duty to God. Watts.

I never once in my life considered, whether I was living as the laws of religion direct, or whether my way of life was such, as would procure me the mercy of God at this hour. Law.

2. A system of divine faith and worship, as opposite to others.

The image of a brute, adorn'd
With gay religions, full of pomp and gold. Milton.
The christian religion, rightly understood, is the deepest and choicest piece of philosophy that is.
More.

The doctrine of the gospel proposes to men such glorious rewards and such terrible punishments as no religion ever did, and gives us far greater assurance of their reality and certainty than ever the world had. Tillotson.

RELIGIONIST. n. f. [from religion.] A bigot to any religious persuasion.

The lawfulness of taking oaths may be revealed to the quakers, who then will stand upon as good a foot for preferment as any other subject; under such a motley administration, what pullings and hawlings,

what a zeal and bias there will be in each religionist to advance his own tribe, and deprecate the others. Day.

RELIGIOUS. adj. [religieux, Fr. religioso,
Latin.]

1. Pious; disposed to the duties of religion.

It is a matter of sound consequence, that the duties are by to much the better performed, by much the men are more religious, so, a whole nation follows the same proceed. Haw.

When holy and devout religious christians Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them from thence; Shady.

So sweet is zealous contemplation
Their lives
Religious titled them the sons of God. Miles.

2. Touching religion.

He God doth late and early pray,
More of his grace than guts to lend,
And entertains the harmless day
With a religious boom or friend. Watts.

3. Among the Romanists, bound by the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience.

Certain hyars and religious men were more with some zeal, to draw the people to the christianity. Adijon.

France has vast numbers of ecclesiastics, secular and religious. Miles.

What the protestants would call a fanatic, is the Roman church a religious of such an order, an English merchant in Lisbon, after some disappointments in the world, retired to the capuchin. Adijon.

4. Exact; strict.

5. Appropriated to strict observance of holy duties.

Her family has the same regulation as a religious house, and all its orders tend to the support of constant regular devotion. Law.

RELIGIOUSLY. adv. [from religious.]

1. Proudly; with obedience to the dictates of religion.

For, who will have his work his waked end win,
Let him with hearty prayer religiously begin. Dryden.

2. According to the rites of religion.

These are their brethren, whom you Catholics hold

Alive and dead, and for their brethren slain
Religiously they ask a sacrifice. Shakespeare.

3. Reverently; with veneration.

1. To forsake; to abandon; to leave; to desert.

The habitation there was utterly relinquish'd.
Adijon.

The English colonies grew poor and weak, because the English lords grew rich and mighty; for they placed Irish tenants upon the lands relinquish'd to the English. Do.

2. To quit; to release; to give up.

The ground of God's sole property in any thing is, the return of it made by man to God, by which not he relinquishes and delivers back to God alone right to the use of that thing, which before had been freely granted him by God. See.

3. To forbear; to depart from.

In case it may be proved, that among the number of rites and orders common unto Catholics are particulars, the use whereof is utterly unlawful, in regard of some special bad and un-qualify; there is no doubt but we ought to re-quish such rites and orders, what freedom
we have to retain the other still. Haw.

RELINQUISHMENT. n. f. [from relinquish.]

The act of forsaking.
Government or ceremonies, or whatsoever it be, which is popish, away with it: this is the thing they require in us, the utter relinquishment of all it uses popish. Hooker.

That natural tenderness of conscience, which most first create in the soul a sense of sin, and from thence produce a sorrow for it, and at length cause a relinquishment of it, is took away by a customary repeated course of sinning. South.

RELISH. n. f. [from relecher, French; to lick again. Minhew. Skinner.]

Taste; the effect of any thing on the palate: it is commonly used of a pleasing taste.

I utter sharp, sweet, and sour, are abundance of immediate peculiar relishes or tastes, which experienced palates can easily discern. Boyle.

These two bodies, whose vapours are so pungent, spring from salt-petre, which betrays upon the tongue no heat nor corrosiveness, but coldness mixed with a somewhat languid relief retaining to bitterness. Boyle.

Much pleasure we have lost, while we abstain'd from this delightful fruit, nor known till now True relief, reliving. Milton.

Could we suppose their relishes as different there as here, yet the manna in heaven suits every palate. Locke.

Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh, and salt are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes to be found distinct in the different parts of the same plant. Locke.

Taste; small quantity just perceptible.

The king-becoming graces;
As justice, verity, temperance, stability,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relief of them. Shakespeare.

Liking; delight in any thing.
We have such a relief for fashion, as to have lost that of wit. Addison.

Good men after death are distributed among these several islands with pleasures of different kinds suitable to the reliefs and perfections of those settled in them. Spectator.

1. Sense; power of perceiving excellence; taste. Addison uses it both with of and for before the thing.

A man, who has any relief for fine writing discovers new beauties, or receives stronger impressions from the masterly strokes of a great author, as if he were perusing him. Addison.

Some hidden seeds of goodness and knowledge lie in a relief of such reflections, as improve the mind, and make the heart better. Spectator.

The pleasure of the proprietor, to whom things become familiar, depends, in a great measure, upon the relief of the spectator. Scott.

2. Delight given by any thing; the power by which pleasure is given.

RELUCTANCE. } n. f. [reluctor, Latin.]
RELUCTANCY. } Unwillingness; repugnance; struggle in opposition: with to or against.

A little more weight, added to the lower of the marbles, is able to surmount their reluctancy to separation, notwithstanding the supposed danger of thereby introducing a vacuum. Boyle.

It favours
Reluct me against God, and his just yoke Laid on our necks. Milton.

Dear witness, heav'n, with what reluctancy
Her helpless innocence I doan to die. Duden.

Enthus, when forced in his own defence to kill Iustus, the poet shows compassionate, and tempering the severity of his looks with a reluctancy to the action, he has pity on his beauty and his youth; and is loth to destroy such a masterpiece of nature. Duden.

How few would be at the pains of acquiring such an habit, and of conquering all the reluctancies and difficulties that lay in the way towards virtue? Atterbury.

Many hard stages of discipline must he pass through, before he can subdue the reluctancies of his corruption. Rogers.

With great reluctancy man is persuaded to acknowledge this necessity. Rogers.

RELUCTANT. adj. [reluctans, Lat.] Unwilling; acting with repugnance.

Reluctant; but in vain! a greater power
Now rul'd him. Milton.

Some refuge in the muse's reluct I found;
Reluctant now I touch'd the trembling string, Bereft of him who taught me how to sing. Tickel.

To RELUCTATE. v. n. [reluctor, Latin.] To resist; to struggle against.

In violation of God's patrimony, the first sacrilege is looked on with some horror, and men devise colours to delude their reluctating consciences; but when they have once made the breach, their scrupulosity soon retires. Deacy of Picty.

RELUCTATION. n. f. [reluctor, Latin.] Repugnance; resistance.

The king prevailed with the prince, though not without some reluctation. Bacon.

Relume her ancient light, nor kindle new. Pope.
To RELUMINE. v. a. To light anew.

Once put out thy light,
I know not where is that Promethean heat;
That can thy light relumine. Shakespeare.

To RELY. v. n. [re and lie.] To lean upon with confidence; to put trust in; to rest upon; to depend upon: with on.

Go in thy native innocence rely
On what thou hast of virtue, summon all!
For God tow'ards thee hath done his part, do thine. Milton.

Egypt does not on the clouds rely,
But to the Nile owes more than to the sky. Waller.

Thus Salom to Philtratos reply'd,
Demanded, on what ground he rely'd,
When with so few he boldly did engage?

He said, he took his courage from his age, Denham.
Though reason is not to be relied upon, as universally sufficient to direct us what to do; yet it is generally to be relied upon and obeyed, where it tells us what we are not to do. South.

Fear relieth upon a natural love of ourselves, and is complicated with a necessary desire of our own preservation. Tillotson.

Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding that relieth on them. Locke.

The pope was become a party in the cause, and could not be relied upon for a decision. Atterbury.

Do we find so much religion in the age, as to rely on the general practice for the measures of our duty? Rogers.

No prince can ever rely on the fidelity of that man, who is a rebel to his Creator. Rogers.

To REMAIN. v. n. [remansco, Latin.]

1. To be left out of a greater quantity or number.

That that remains, shall be buried in death. Job.
Bake that which ye will bake to-day; and that which remaineth over, lay up until the morning. Proverbs.

2. To continue; to endure; to be left in a particular state.

He for the time remained stupidly good. Milton.

3. To be left after any event.

Childless thou art, childless remain. Milton.
In the families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to inheritance. Locke.

4. Not to be lost.

Now somewhat long, whose endless sovereignty
Among the shepherds may for aye remain. Spenser.

I was created more than all that were before me, also my wisdom remained with me. Ecclesi.

It what you have heard, shall remain in you, ye shall continue in the Son. 1 John.

5. To be left as not comprised.

That a father may have more power over his children, is easily granted; but that an elder brother has so over his brethren, remains to be proved. Locke.

6. To continue in a place.

To REMAIN. v. a. To await; to be left to.

Such end had the kid, for he would weaned be
Of envy, coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pride, does all them remain
That of such false friendship shall be slain. Spenser.

With open staff
I'll rase such onerous on thy clatter'd iron,
Which long shall not withhold me from thy head,
That in a little time, while byath remains thee,
Thou out shalt with thyself at Gath to boast,
But never shalt see Gath. Milton.

If thence he tempe, what remains him less Than unknown dangers? Milton.

The elder conquest now
Remains thee, while by this host of friends, Back on thy toes more glorious to return. Milton.

REMAIN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Relick; that which is left. Generally used in the plural.
I grieve with the old, for so many additional inconveniences, more than their small remain of life seemed destined to undergo. Pope.

REM

2. The body left by the foot.
But fowls obscurely remember'd his remains,
And dogs had torn him. Pope
Oh would'st thou sing what heroes Winifred bore,
Or gift old warriors, whose adur'd remains
In weeping vaults, her hallow'd earth contains! Pope
3. Abode; habitation. Not in use.
A most miraculous work in this good thing,
Which often since my here remain in England,
I've seen him do. Shakespeare
- REMAINDER. adj. [from remain.] Remaining; refuse; left.
His brain
Is as dry as the remainder basket
After a voyage. Shakespeare
We turn not back the silks upon the merchant,
When we have spoil'd them, nor the remainder vands
We do not throw in unrespective place,
Because we now are full. Shakespeare
- REMAINDER. n. f.
1. What is left; remnant; relics.
The gods protect you,
And bless the good remainders of the court! Shakespeare
It may well employ the remainder of their lives to perform it to purpose, I mean, the work of evangelical obedience. Hammond
Mahomet's crescent by our souls' increase,
Blessed the land's remainder of the East. Denham
Could his ingratitude have made any one so diabolical, had not cruelty came in as a second to its assistance, and cleared the villain's breast of all remainders of humanity? South
There are two restraints which God hath put upon human nature, shame and fear; shame is the weaker, and hath place only in those in whom there are some remainders of virtue. Tillotson
What madness moves you, matrons, to destroy
The last remainder of unhappy Troy? Dryden
If he, to whom ten talents were committed, has squandered away five, he is concerned to make a double improvement of the remainder. Rogers
If these decoctions be repeated till the water comes off clear, the remainder yields no salt. Arbutnot
Of six millions raised every year for the service of the publick, one third is intercepted through the several subordinations of artful men in office, before the remainder is applied to the proper use. Swift
2. The body when the soul is departed; remains.
Shew us
The poor remainder of Andronicus. Shakespeare
3. [In law.] The last chance of inheritance.
A fine is levied to grant a reversion or remainder, expectant upon a lease that yieldeth no rent. Bacon
- TO REMAKE. v. a. [re and make.] To make anew.
That, which she owns above her, must perfectly renew us after the image of our maker. Glennville
- TO REMAND. v. a. [re and mando, Lat.]
To send back; to call back.
The better sort quitted their freeholds and fled into England, and never returned, though many laws were made to remand them back. Davies Philoxenus, for despising some dull poetry of Dionysius, was condemned to dig in the quarries;
from whence being remanded, at his return Dionysius produced some other of his verses, which as soon as Philoxenus had read, he made no reply, but, calling to the waiters, said, carry me again to the quarries. Government of the Tongue
- REMANENT. n. f. [remans, Latin; remanent, old Fr.] It is now contracted to remnant. The part remaining.
Her majesty bought of his executrix the reman-ent of the last term of three years. Bacon
- REMARK. n. f. [remarque, Fr.] Observation; note; notice taken.
He cannot distinguish difficult and noble speculations from trifling and vulgar remarks. Collier
- TO REMARK. v. a. [remarque, French.]
1. To note; to observe.
It is easy to observe what has been remarked, that

REM

- the names of simple ideas are the least liable to mistakes. Locke
2. To distinguish; to point out; to mark.
Not in use.
The prisoner Samson here I seek.
—His manacles remark him, there he sits. Milton
- REMARKABLE. adj. [remarquable, Fr.]
Observable; worthy of note.
So did Orpheus plainly teach, that the world had beginning in time, from the will of the most high God, whose remarkable words are thus converted. Raleigh
'Tis remarkable, that they Talk most, who have the least to say. Prior
What we obtain by conversation soon vanishes, unless we note down what remarkable we have found. Watts
- REMARKABLENESS. n. f. [from 'remarkable.] Observableness; worthiness of observation.
They signify the remarkableness of this punishment of the Jews, as signal revenge for the crucified Christ. Hammond
- REMARKABLY. adv. [from remarkable.] Observably; in a manner worthy of observation.
Chiefly assur'd
Remarkably so late, of thy too true,
So faithful love. Milton
Such parts of these writings, as may be remarkably stupid, should become subjects of an occasional criticism. Watts
- REMARKER. n. f. [remarqueur, Fr.] Observer; one that remarks.
If the remarker would but once try to outline the author by writing a better book on the same subject, he would soon be convinced of his own insufficiency. Watts
- REMEDIAL. adj. [from remedy.] Capable of remedy.
- REMEDIALTY. adj. [from remedy.] Medicinal;
affording a remedy. Not in use.
All you, unapplied virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate
In the good man's distress. Shakespeare
- REMEDILESS. adj. [from remedy.] Not admitting remedy; irreparable; cure-less; incurable.
Sad Esculapius
Imprison'd was in chains remediless. Spenser
The war, grounded upon this general remediless necessity, may be termed the general, the remediless, or the necessary war. Raleigh
We, by rightful doom remediless,
Were lost in death, till he that dwelt above
High-thron'd in secret bliss, for us trail dust Emptied his glory. Milton
Flatter him it may, as those are good at flattering, who are good for nothing else; but in the mean time, the poor man is left under a remediless delusion. South
- REMEDILESSNESS. n. f. [from remediless.] Incurableness.
- REMEDY. n. f. [remedium, Lat. remede,
French.]
1. A medicine by which any illness is cured.
The difference between poisons and remedies is easily known by their effects, and common reason soon distinguishes between virtue and vice. Swift
2. Cure of any uneasiness.
Here hope began to dawn; and resolv'd to try,
She fix'd on this her utmost remedy. Dryden
O how short my interval of woe!
Our griefs how swift, our remedies how slow. Prior
3. That which counteracts any evil; with to, for, or against; for is most used.
What may be remedy or cure
To evils, which our own misdeeds have wrought.
Civil government is the proper remedy for the inconveniencies of the state of nature. Locke Attempts have been made for some remedy against this evil. Swift

REM

4. Reparation; means of repairing any hurt.
Things, without all remedy,
Should be without regard. Shakespeare
In the death of a man there is no remedy. Id.
- TO REMEDY. v. a. [remédier, French.]
1. To cure; to heal.
Sorry we are, that any good and pious soul should be grieved with that which is done, but remedy their grief, lieth not so much in us as themselves. Id.
2. To repair or remove mischief.
TO REMEMBER. v. a. [remember, old Fr.;
remember, Italian.]
1. To bear in mind any thing; not to forget.
Remember not against us former iniquities. Psalms
Remember thee!
Ay thou poor ghost, while memory holds a place
In this distracted brain. Remember thee! Shakespeare
2. To recollect; to call to mind.
He having once seen and remembered me, rose from the beginning began to be in the rearward.
We are said to remember any thing, when idea of it arises in the mind with a consciousness that we have had this idea before. Id.
3. To keep in mind; to have present the attention.
Remember what I warn thee, thou to taste;
And then the bitter consequence. Id.
This is to be remembered, that it is not possible
now to keep a young gentleman from vanity, total ignorance of it; unless you will all his life
new him up. Id.
4. To bear in mind, with intent of reward or punishment.
Cry unto God; for you shall be remembered him. Baird
He brings them back,
Remembering mercy and his covenant sword. Id.
5. To mention; not to omit.
A citation ought to be certain, in respect of the person cited; for, if such certainty be there omitted, such citation is invalid, as in many cases hereafter to be remembered. Id.
6. To put in mind; to force to recollect to remind.
His hand and leg commanding without threaten and rather remembering than chastising. Id.
Joy, being altogether wanting.
It doth remember me the more of sorrow. Id.
It grieves my heart to be remember'd thus
By any one, of one so glorious. Id.
These petitions, and the answer of the council of London, were ample materials for asference with the lords, who might be thereby remembered of their duty. Id.
I would only remember them in love and protection, with the doctrine of the Jews, and the example of the Grecians. Id.
7. To preserve from being forgotten.
Let them have their wages duly paid,
And something over, to remember me. Shakespeare
- REMEMBERER. n. f. [from remember.] One who remembers.
A brave mailer to servants, and a rememberer
the least good office; for his flock he transplanted most of them into plentiful soils. Id.
- REMEMBRANCE. n. f. [remembrance, Fr.]
1. Retention in memory; memory.
Though Cloten then but young, time has not worn him
From my remembrance. Shakespeare
And memory been lost with innocence,
We had not known the sentence nor the offence.
'Twas his chief punishment to keep in store
The sad remembrance what he was before. Id.
Sharp remembrance on the English path
And shame of being match'd by such a lot,
Rouse conscious virtue up in every heart. Dryden
This ever grateful remembrance heat
To me thou ow'st, to me the vital air. Id.
2. Recollection; revival of any idea, or miniscence.

REM

I hate thy beams,

Nothing to my remembrance from what state
I fell; how glorious once above thy sphere. Milton.
Remembrance in when the same idea recurs, without the operation of the like object on the external faculty. Locke.

Thou I have heard relating what was done,
Ere my remembrance. Milton.
REMEMBRANCER. n. f. [from remem- brance.]

1. One that reminds; one that puts in mind.

As I know, the agent for his master,
And the remembrance of her, to hold
The hand fast to her lord. Shaksp.
God is present in the consequences of good and bad, he is there a remembrance to call our actions to mind, and a witness to bring them to judgment.
Taylor.

Would I were in my grave;
For, living here, you're but my curs'd remembrances. Otway.

2. An officer of the exchequer.

All are digested into books, and sent to the re-membrancer of the exchequer, that he make processes upon them. Bacon.
To REMERCIER. v. a. [mercier, Fr.] To thank. Obsolete.

On long his service and his dearest life
For her defence, against that earle to fight;
See him mercied, as the patron of her life.
Spenser.

To REMIGRATE. v. n. [remigro, Lat.]
To remove back again.

Some other ways he proposes to divest some bodies of their borrowed shapes, and make them reigrate to their first simplicity. Boyle.

REMIGRATION. n. f. [from remigrate.]
Removal back again.

The Scots, transplanted hither, became acquainted with our customs, which, by occasional igrations, became diffused in Scotland. Hale.

To REMIND. v. a. [re and mind.] To put in mind; to force to remember.

When age itself, which will not be defied, shall be in to arrest, seize and remind us of our mortality by pains and dulness of senses, yet then the pleasure of the mind shall be in its full vigour. South.

The brazen figure of the consul, with the ring on his finger, reminded me of Juvenal's majors under gemine. Addison.

REMISCEANCE. n. f. [remiscens, Lat.]
Recollection; recovery of ideas.

I ask about for all circumstances that may revive my memory or remiscence. Hale.

VOL. II.

REM

For the other part of memory, called remis- cence, which is the retrieving of a thing at present forgot, or but confusedly remembered, by setting the mind to refresh every little cell of the brain;
while it is thus busied, how accidentally does the thing sought for offer itself to the mind? South.

REMINISCENTIAL. adj. [from remini- scence.] Relating to reminiscence.

Would truth dispense, we could be content with Plato, that knowledge were but remembrance, that intellectual acquisition were but reminiscential exo-cation. Brown.

REMISSE. adj. [remis, Fr. remissus, Lat.]

1. Not vigorous; slack.
The water defers the corpuscles, unless it flow with a precipitate motion; for then it hurries them out along with it, till its motion becomes more languid and remis. Woodward.

2. Not careful; slothful.
Mad ire and wrathful fury makes me weep,
That thus we die, while remis traitors sleep. Shaksp.
If when by God's grace we have conquered the first difficulties of religion, we grow careless and remis, and neglect our guard, God's spirit will not always strive with us. Tillotson.
Your candour, in pardoning my errors, may make me more remis in correcting them. Dryden.

3. Not intense.

These nervous, bold, those languid and remis;
Here cold salutes, but there a lover's kiss. Roscom.

REMISSEBLE. adj. [from remis.] Admitting forgiveness.

REMISSION. n. f. [remission, Fr. remissio,
Latin.]

1. Abatement; relaxation; moderation.
Error, mischief, and forgetfulness do now and then become suitors for some remission of extreme rigour. Bacon.

2. Cessation of intenseness.
In September and October these diseases do not abate and remit in proportion to the remission of the sun's heat. Woodward.
This difference of intention and remission of the mind in thinking, every one has experienced in himself. Locke.

3. In physic, remission is when a distemper abates, but does not go quite off before it returns again.

4. Release; abatement of right or claim.
Not only an expedition, but the remission of a duty or tax, were transmitted to posterity after this manner. Addison.

Another ground of the bishop's fears is the re*mission* of the first fruits and tithes. Sayt.

5. Forgiveness; pardon.
My penance is to call Lucetta back,
And ask remission for my folly paid. Shaksp.
That plea
With God or man will gain thee no remission.
Milton.

Many believe the article of remission of sins,
but they believe it without the condition of repentance, or the fruits of holy life. Taylor.

REMISSELY. adv. [from remis.]

1. Carelessly; negligently; without close attention.

How should it then be in our power to do it coldly or remisly? so that our desire being natural, is also in that degree of exactness whereunto nothing can be added. Hooker.

2. Not vigorously; not with ardour or eagerness; slackly.

There was not an equal concurrence in the prosecution of this matter among the bishops, some of them proceeding more remisly in it. Clarendon.

REMISSENESS. n. f. [from remis.] Carelessness; negligence; coldness; want of ardour; inattention.

Future evils,
Or new, or by remisness now conceiv'd,
Are now to have no successive degrees. Shaksp.

No great offenders scape their doom;
Small grates from lenity and remisness comes.
Denham.

REM

Jack, through the remisness of confidables, has always found means to escape. A. Butler.

The great concern of God for our salvation, is so far from an argument of remisness in us, that it ought to excite our utmost care. Rogers.

To REMIT. v. a. [remitto, Latin.]

1. To relax; to make less intense.

So willingly doth God remit his ire.
Our supreme foe may much remit
His anger, and perhaps thus far remov'd,
Not more as not offending, satisfy'd
With what is punish'd. Milton.

2. To forgive a punishment.

With suppliant prayers then powers appease;
The lost Napæum once will soon repent
Their anger, and remit the punishment. Dryden.

The magistrate can often, where the publick good demands not the execution of the law, remit
the punishment of criminal offences by his own authority; but yet cannot remit the satisfaction due to any private man. Locke.

3. [remette, Fr.] To pardon a fault.

At my lovely Tamora's intercess,
I do remit those young men's heinous faults. Shaksp.
Whose favour thus ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose favour thus ye retain, they are returned. John.

4. To give up; to resign.

In grievous and inhuman crimes, offenders should be remitted to their place to be punished in the place where they have offended. Hayward.

The Egyptian crown I to your hands remit;
And, with it, take his heart who offers it. Dryden.

Heaven thinks fit

Thee to thy former fury to remit. Dryden.

5. [remette, Fr.] To defer; to refer.

The bishop had certain pious instructions in the front, though there were a plain clause at the foot, that remitted all to the bishop's discretion. Bacon.

I remit me to themselves, and challenge their natural ingenuity to say, whether they have not sometimes such shiverings within them?

Government of the Tongue.

veyance and payment of money.

2. [In common law.] A restitution of one that hath two titles to lands or tenements, and is seized of them by his latter title, under his title that is more ancient, in case where the latter is defective. Covent.

REM

You said, if I return'd next day in Lent,
I should be a remitter of your grace;
In th' interim my letters should take place
Of absolutions. Donne.

REMITTANCE, n. f. [corrupted from remittent.] Remission; that which is left; that which remains.

Poor key and figure of a holy king!
Thou blood, is remittance of that royal blood,
But I wish that I could see thy ghost's shadow
In some place. Shakespeare.

From forth the main and bottom of the field,
Where I may track the remittance of my thoughts. Shakespeare.

About his belly
Parents of pockmarked and old cokes of roses
Were thickly remitted. Shakespeare.

I was created to get them face to face,
And to stand by a confession, without which they have No probability to preserve the remittance that had Not escaped. Keats.

It seems that the remittance of the generation of men was in such a degree lived. Racine.

The remittance of my tale is of a length
To tire your patience. Dryden.

A feeble army and an empty senate,
Remnants of mighty battles fought is a. Addison.

See the poor remnants of their flighted lions!
My hands shall read what e'en thy rapine spares. Pope.

The frequent use of the latter was a remnant of purity, which never admitted tincture in the vulgar tongue. Sage.

mediate ideas, that show the connection of remote ones. Locke.

6. Alien; not agreeing.

All those propositions, how remote from reason, are to be feared, that men will sooner part with their lives, than suffer themselves to doubt of them. Locke.

7. Abstracted.

Wherever the mind places itself by any thought, either amongst, or remote from all bodies, it can,
in this uniform idea of space, nowhere find any boundary. Locke.

REMOTELY, adv. [from remote.] Not nearly; at a distance.

It is commonly supposed, that the earth was thinly inhabited, at least not remotely planted before the flood. Brown.

Two lines in Mercurius and Lausus are indeed remotely allied to Virgil's sense, but too like the tenderness of Ovid. Dryden.

 Renews the full remembrance of our fate,
 An empire from its old foundations rent. Dryden.

Look round to see
 The land me gulf upon the fatal tree;
 Then rend it off. Dryden.

Is it not as much reason to say, when any monarchy was shattered to pieces, and divided amongst revolted subjects, that God was enabled to prevent monarchial power, by rending a fettered empire into a multitude of little governments? Locke.

When a man's mind is rent from passion, mind,
 I rend my neck, and make a hole in my wound. Pope.

RENDEER. n. f. [from rend.] One that rends, a tiger.

Ripe pulpy apples, as pippins and rennetings, are of a typy trancation nature.

Mortimer.

TO RENOVATE, v. a. [renovo, Latin.]

To renew; to restore to the first state.

All nature feels the renovating force
Of winter, only to the thoughtless eye
In ruin seen.

Thomson.

RENOVATION, n. f. [renovation, Fr. reno-vatio, Latin.] Renewal; the act of renewing; the state of being renewed.

Som'd continueth some small time, which is a renovation, and not a continuance; for the body perco'ss'd hath a trepidation wrought in the minute parts, and so *renew*eth the percussio'n of the air.

Bacon.

The kings entered into speech of renewing the treaty, the king saying, that though king Philip's piston were the same, yet his intentions were raised;
in which case a renovation of treaty was used.

Bacon.

To second life

Wak'd in the renovation of the just,
Relig'us him up, with heav'n and earth renew'd.

Milton.

TO RENOUNCE, v. a. [renoncer, Fr.
renuncio, Lat.]

1. To disown; to abnegate.

From Th'bes my birth I own; and no disgrace
Can force me to renounce the honour of my race.

Dryden.

2. To quit upon oath.

This world I do renounce; and in your sight
Shake patiently my great affliction off.

Shaksp.

Pride and passion, and the opinions of the world, must not be our counsellors; for we renounce the
at our baptism.

Kent.

TO RENOUNCE, v. n. To declare renun-ation. The following passage is a negalicisms; renoncer à mon sang.

On this firm principle I ever stood;
He of my sons who fails to make it good,
By one rebellious act renounces to my blood.

Dr.

RENOU'CEMENT, n. f. [from renoucer.]
Act of renouncing; renunciation.

I hold you as a thing enkind and fam'd;
By your renoucement, an immortal spirit

Shaksp.

RENOU'WN, n. f. [renommée, Fr.] Fame;
celebrity; praise widely spread.

She
Is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom to often I have heard renown.

Shaksp.

'Tis of more renown

To make a river, than to build a town.

Hall.

Nor envy we
Thy great renown, nor gudge thy victory.

Dryd.

TO RENOWN, v. a. [renommer, Fr. in
the noun.] To make famous.

Let us satisfy our eyes
With the memorials and the things of fame,
That do renown this city.

Shaksp.

Soft elocution does thy style renown,
Gentle or sharp according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies or to lash at vice.

Dryd.

In solemn silence stand
Stern tyrants, whom their cruelties renown,
And emperors in Parian marbles frown.

Addis.

A bard whom pillar'd pasturals renown.

TO RENOWN, v. a. [renommer, Fr. in
the noun.] To make famous.

Let us satisfy our eyes
With the memorials and the things of fame,
That do renown this city.

Soft elocution does thy style renown,
Gentle or sharp according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies or to lash at vice.

In solemn silence stand
Stern tyrants, whom their cruelties renown,
And emperors in Parian marbles frown.

A bard whom pillar'd pasturals renown.

RENOU'WNED, particip. adj. [from renown.]
Famous; celebrated; eminent; famed

These were the renowned of the congregation of the tribes, heads of thousands

That thrice renowned and learned Frenchmen, finding Petrarch's tomb without any inscription wrote one himself; saying, shame it was, that I who sung his mistress's praise seven years bet-her death, should twelve years want an epitaph.

The rest were long to tell, though far renown'd.

Of all the cities in Romanian lands,
The chief and most renown'd Ravenna stands,
Adorn'd in ancient times with arms and arts.

It is,
An isle renown'd for steel and unexhausted mines.

RENT, n. f. [from rend] A break; a laceration.

This council made a schism and rent from the most ancient and purest churches which lived before them.

Thou viper
Hast cancell'd kindred, made a rent in nature,
And through her holy bowels gnaw'd thy way.

Through thy own blood to empire.

He who fees this vast rent in to high a rock, for the convex parts of one side exactly tally with the concave of the other, must be satisfied, that it was the effect of an earthquake.

TO RENT, v. a. [rather to rend.] To tear; to lacerate.

A time to rent, and a time to sew. Ecc'lesiasticus.

TO RENT, v. n. [now written rant.] To roar; to bluster: we still say, a renting fellow, for a noisy bully.

He ventur'd to diminish his fear,
That partings wont to rent and tear,
And give the desperate attack
To danger still behind its back.

RENT, n. f. [rente, Fr.]

1. Revenue; annual payment.

Idol ceremony,
What are thy rents? what are thy comings in?

O ceremony shew me but thy worth!

What ceremony shew me but thy worth!

Idol ceremony,
What are thy rents? what are thy comings in?

O ceremony shew me but thy worth!

I bought an annual rent or two,
 And live just as you fee I do. Pope.
 Money paid for any thing held of another.
 Such is the mould, that the blest tenant feeds
 On precious fruits, and pays his rent in weeds.

May all to Athens back again repair. Shaksp.

The fools overflowed with smart reporters, and were only distinguished from the intended wits, by being called coxcombs. Boston.

To REPEAL, v. a. [repeal, Fr.]
1. To recall. Out of use.

REP

Of late,

Then corn was given them gratis, you repin'd.

Shakespeare.

The fines imposed were the more repined against, because they were allotted to the rebuilding of St. Paul's church.

Clarendon.

You think how many diseases, and how much misery there is in the world, you will fall down at your knees, and, instead of repining at one's lot, will admire to many blessings received at the hand of God.

Temple.

2. To ENVE.

Beginnings repine of violated night;

And curse the invading sun, and hicken at the sight

Dryden.

Tell in the gate

How pale diseases and repining age.

Dryden.

REPLACER, n. f. [from repine.] One that puts or mummies.

REPLACEMENT, v. a. [replacer, Fr. re and place.]

1. To put again in the former place.

The earl being apprehended, upon examination cleared himself well, as he was replaced in his government.

Bacon.

The howls, remov'd for fear,
The youths re plac'd; and soon restor'd the cheer

Dryden.

2. To put in a new place.

His gods put themselves under his protection, to be replaced in their promised Italy.

Dryden.

TO REPLAINT, v. a. [re and plaint.] To fold one part often over another.

In Raphael's best works, are many small foldings often replated, which look like to many whip-cords.

Dryden.

TO REPLANT, v. a. [replanter, French; re and plant.] To plant anew.

Small trees being yet unripe, covered in autumn with dung until the spring, take up and replant in good ground.

Bacon.

REPLANTATION, n. f. [from replant.] The act of planting again.

TO REPLENISH, v. a. [repleo, from re and plenus, Lat. repleo, old Fr.]

1. To stock; to fill.

Multiply and replenish the earth.

Genesis.

The woods replenish'd with deer, and the plains with fowl.

Heylin.

The waters

With fish replenish'd, and the air with fowl.

Milt.

2. To finish; to consummate; to complete.

Not proper, nor in use.

We finish'd

The most replenish'd sweet work of nature,

That from the prime creation e'er the tram'd Shak.

TO REPLENISH, v. n. To recover the former fullness. Not in use.

The humours in men's bodies encrease and decrease as the moon doth; and the nature purge some days, for the full, for then the humours will not replete to full.

Bacon.

REPLET, adj. [replet, French; repletus, Lat.] Full; completely filled; filled to exuberance.

The world's large tongue

Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks;

Fall of companions and wounding flouts.

Shaksp.

This mortification, it is over high a degree, is less better than the corrosion of poison; as sometimes in autumn, it given to bodies not replete with humours; for where humours abound, the humours have the parts.

Bacon.

His words, replete with guile,

Into her heart too early entrance won.

Milton.

In a dog, out of whose eye, being wounded, the aqueous humour did copiously flow, yet in six hours the bulb of the eye was again replete with its humour, without the application of any medicines.

Han.

REPLETION, n. f. [repletion, French.] The state of being over full.

The tree had too much repletion, and was oppressed with its own sap; for repletion is an enemy to generation.

Bacon.

REP

All dreams

Are from repletion and complexion bred;

From rising fumes of undigested food.

Dryden.

Thirst and hunger may be fancy's art;

But this repletion is to have dream'd.

Dryden.

The action of the stomach is totally stopped by too great repletion.

Arbuthnot.

REP

It is reported,

That good duke Humphry haunterously is murder'd.

Shakespeare.

Report, say they, and we will report it. Jeerous.

2. To give repute.

Timothens was well reported of by the brethren.

Acts.

A wide well reported of for good works. 1 Tim.

3. To give an account of.

There is a king in Judah, and now shall it be reported to the king.

Deuteronomy.

4. To return; to rebound; to give back.

In Thomas's church with windows only from above that reporteth the voice thence ten times, if you stand by the door and wall over against the door.

Bacon.

REPORT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Rumour; popular fame.

2. Repute; publick character.

My body's report'd

With Roman tales, and my report was once

Then with the left of note.

Shakespeare.

In all appearing ourselves the ministers of God,

by honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report.

2 Corinthians.

3. Account returned.

See examples enter with the swelling tide,

From the silent as they to make report.

And tell the wonders of her to foreign's court.

Waller.

4. Account given by lawyers of cases.

After a man has finished the general principles of the law, reading the reports of adjudged cases, will richly improve his mind.

Watts.

5. Sound; loud noise; reprobation.

The stronger speaks down with the better: the report of an ordinance, the voice.

Bacon.

The falling billows make a long report.

And beat his sides.

Dryden.

REPORTER, n. f. [from report.] Relater;

One that gives an account.

There the appar'd, or my reporter devis'd will be her.

Shakespeare.

Rumours were made of great distrust among the nobility, for this cause the Lords assembly, gave order to apprehend the reporters of these fables.

Hume.

If I had known a thing they concealed, I should never be the reporter of it.

Pope.

REPORTINGLY, adv. [from reporting.]

By common fame.

Others say thou dost deserve, and I believe it better than reportingly.

Shakespeare.

REPOSE, n. f. [from repose.] The act of repoling.

Do not thou think,

If I would hand a grant there, would the refusal

Of any truth, virtue, or worth in thee

2. To rest in confidence: with on.

And, for the way's are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company.
Upon whole both and honour I repose. Shakespeare.
REPOSE. n. f. [reposita, French.]

1. Sleep; rest; quiet.

Merciful powers!
Refrain in me the curled thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare.
The hour

Of night, and of all things now retir'd to rest,
Mind us of like repose. Milton.

I all the fix'd long day
Consume in meditation deep repose
From human converse; nor a slat of eye

2. Cure of rest.

After great lights must be great shadows, which we call repose; because in reality the light would be lost, if attracted by a continuity of glittering objects. Dryden.

REPOSEDNESS. n. f. [from reposed.] State of being at rest.

TO REPOSEITE. v. a. [repositus, Latin.] To lay up; to lodge as in a place of safety.

Others reposite their young in holes, and secure themselves also therein, because such security is wanting, their lives being sought. Deham.

REPOSITION. n. f. [from reposito.] The act of replacing.

Being reposed in the reposition of the bone, take care to keep it by by deputation. Weyman.

REPOSITORY. n. f. [repositoire, French;
repositorium, Latin.] A place where any thing is safely laid up.

The mind of man not being capable of having many ideas under view at once, it was necessary to have a repository to lay up those ideas. Locke.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them, to us without the appearance of irretrievable confusion, but with respect to his own knowledge into the most regular and methodical reposit- ories. Rogers.

TO REPOSESS. v. a. [re and possideo.] To possess again.

How comes it now, that almost all that realm is repossessed of them? Spenser.

Her suit is now to repossess those lands,
Which we in justice cannot well deny. Shakespeare.
Nor shall any father repossess the land,
The father's fortune never to return. Pope.

TO REPREHEND. v. a. [reprehendo,
Latin.]

1. To reprove; to chide.

All as before his fight, whole presence to offend with any the least int'cuncts, we would be sure as loath as they, who most reprehend or denide that we do. Hooker.

Pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed. Shakespeare.
They like dumb statues stand,
Which when I saw, I reprehended them;
And ask'd the mayor, what meant this wilful silence? Shakespeare.

2. To blame; to censure.
He could not reprehend the fight, so many strew'd
the ground. Chapman.

I nor advise, nor reprehend the choice
Of Marley-hill. Philips.

3. To detect of fallacy.
This colour will be reprehended or encountered, by imputing to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty. Bacon.

4. To charge with as a fault: with of be- fore the crime.

Antippos, being reprehended of luxury by one that was not rich, for that he gave six crowns for a small fish, answered, Why, what would you have given? the other said, Some twelve pence: Antippos said again, and six crowns is no more with me.
Bacon.

REPREHENDER. n. f. [from reprehend.]
Blamer; censurer.

Those fiercest reprehenders of things, established by publick authority, are always confident and bold-spirited men; but their confidence for the most part riseth from too much credit given to their own wits, for which cause they are seldom free from errors. Hooker.

REPREHENSIBLE. adj. [reprehensibilis, French; reprehensus, Latin.] Blamable;
culpable; censurable.

REPREHENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from repre- hensibilis.] Blamableness; culpableness.

REPREHENSIBLY. adv. [from reprehen- sibilis.] Blamably; culpably.

REPREHENSION. n. f. [reprehensio, Lat.]
Reproof; open blame.

To a heart fully replete, counsel is tedious, but reprehension is wholesome. Bacon.

There is likewise due to the publick a civil repre-
hension of advocates, where the ce-appearerth cunning counsel, gross neglect, and slight information. Bacon.

The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow christians, or the governors of the church, then more publick reprehensions and inceptions. Hammond.

What effect can that man hope from his most zealous reprehensions, who lays himself open to recrimination? Government of the Tongue.

REPRISIVE. adj. [from reprehend.]
Given to reproof.

TO REPRESENT. v. a. [represento, Lat.
representor, French.]

1. To exhibit, as if the thing exhibited were present.

Before him burn
Seven lamps, as in a zodiac representing
The heavenly fires. Milton.

2. To describe; to show in any particular character.

This bank is thought the greatest load on the Genoese, and the managers of it have been repre- sented as a second kind of senate. Addison.

3. To fill the place of another by a vica- rious character; to personate: as, the parliament represents the people.

Cannot but yield you forth to publick thanks, Forerunning your requital. Shakespeare.

2. Return; reciprocal action.

No merit their aversion can remove,
Nor ill requital can efface their love. Waller.

3. Reward; recompense.

He ask'd me for a song,
And in requital op'd his leathern scrip,
And shew'd me similes of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milt.

I have ta'en a cordal,
Sent by the king of Italy, in requital
Of all my miseries, to make me happy. Denham.

In all the light that the heavens bestow upon this lower world, though the lower world cannot equal their benefaction, yet with a kind of grateful return it reflects those rays, that it cannot recompense; so that there is some return however, though there can be no requital. South.

TO REQUITE. v. a. [requiter, French.]

1. To repay; to retaliate good or ill; to recompense.

If he love me to madness, I shall never requite him. Shakespeare.

When Joseph's brethren saw that their father was dead, they said, Joseph will requite us all the evil we did. Genesis.

An avenger against his enemies, and one that shall requite kindness to his friends. Feckinslieu.

Uim within protect from harms;
He can requite thee, for he knows the charms
That cull fame on such gentle acts as these. Milton.

Great idol of mankind, we neither claim
The praise of merit, nor aspire to fame!
'Tis all we beg thee to conceal from sight
Those acts of goodness which themselves requite:
O let us still the secret joy partake,
To follow virtue ev'n for virtue's sake. Pope.

Unhappy Wallace,
Great patriot hero! all requited chief! Thomson.

2. To do or give in reciprocation.

He hath requited me evil for good. 1 Samuel.

Open not thine heart to every man, lest he requite thee with a sword's turn. Keblestieue.

RESA'LE. n. f. [re and sale.] Sale at second hand.

Monopolies and coemption of wares for resale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Bacon.

TO RESALUTE. v. a. [resaluto, Lat. resaluer, Fr.] To salute or greet anew.

We drew her up to land,
And trod ourselves the resaluted land. Chapman.

To resalute the world with sacred light, Lencothoe wak'd. Milton.

TO RESCIND. v. a. [rescindo, Lat. rescinder, Fr.] To cut off; to abrogate a law.

It is the imposing a sacramental obligation upon him, which being the condition, upon the performance whereof all the promises of endless bliss are made over, it is not possible to rescind or disclaim the standing obliged by it. Hammond.

I spoke against the test, but was not heard;
These to rescind, and peerage to restore. Dryden.

RESCISSION. n. f. [rescission, Fr. rescissus, Lat.] The act of cutting off; abrogation.

If any infer rescission of their estate to have been for idolatry, that the governments of all idolatrous nations should be also dissolved, it followeth not. Bacon.

RESCISSION. adj. [rescissioire, Fr. rescissus, Lat.] Having the power to cut off.

TO RESCRI'BE. v. a. [rescribo, Lat. rescribere, French.]

1. To write back.

Whenever a prince on his being consulted rescribes or writes back Tolernamus, he dispenses with that act otherwise unlawful. Ayliffe.

2. To write over again.

Calling for more paper to rescribe them, he shew'd him the difference betwixt the ink-box and the sand-box. Howel.

RESCRIPT. n. f. [rescrit, Fr. rescriptum, Lat.] Edict of an emperor.

One finding a great mass of money digged under ground, and being somewhat doubtful, signified it to the emperor, who made a rescript thus: Ubi it. Bacon.

The popes, in such cases, where canons were silent, did, after the manner of the Roman emperors, write back their determinations, which were filed rescripts or decretal epistles, having the force of laws. Ayliffe.

TO RESCUE. v. a. [rescorre, old Fr.] To let free from any violence, confinement, or danger.

Sir Scudamore, after long sorrow, in the end met with Britomartis, who succoured him and rescued his love. Spenser.

My uncles both are slain in rescuing war. Shallp.

We're bent with thieves;

Rescue thy misfortunes, if thou be a man. Shakespeare.

Dr. Bancroft understood the church excellently, and had almost rescued it out of the hands of the Calvinist party. Clarendon.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, if he commit those acts, against which scripture is plain, that they that do them shall not inherit eternal life, must necessarily relapse, that nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstitious. Hammond.

Who was that just man, whom had not heav'n
Rescued, had in his righteousness been lost? Milton.

Riches cannot rescue from the grave,
Which claims alike the monarch and the slave. Dryden.

We have never yet heard of a tumult raised to rescue a minister whom his master desired to bring to a fair account. Darviant.

RESCUE. n. f. [rescuiss, rescusse, old Fr. rescussus, low Lat.] Deliverance from violence, danger, or confinement.

How comest thou
Have help to make this rescue? Shakespeare.

RESCUER. n. f. [from rescue.] One that rescues.

RESEARCH. n. f. [recherche, Fr.] Inquiry; search.

By a skilful application of those notices, may be gained in such researches the accelerating and bettering of truth, supplying names, and draining tears. Glanville.

I submit those mistakes, into which I may have fallen, to the better consideration of others, who shall have made research into this business with more liberty. Holder.

A liberty adapted to every rank, such as the researches of human wisdom sought for, but could not discover. Boyle.

TO RESEA'CH. v. a. [rechercher, Fr.] To examine; to inquire.

It is not only to research with due distinction, in the actions of eminent personages, but how much may have been blameworthy by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity. Wotton.

TO RESEAT. v. a. [re and seat.] To seat again.

When he's produc'd, will you reseat him
Upon his father's throne? Dryden.

RESEIZURE. n. f. One that seizes again.

RESEIZURE. n. f. [re and seizure.] Repeated seizure; seizure a second time.

Here we have the charter of foundation; it is now the more easy to judge of the fortune of eyes: Delude the image, and you direct the sight.

RESEMBLANCE. n. f. [resemblance, Fr.]

1. Likeness; similitude; representation.

One mass end of poetry and painting to please; they bear a great resemblance to each other. Dryd.
The quality produced hath commonly no resemblance with the thing producing it, wherefore we look on it as a bare effect of power. Locke

So chymists boast they have a pow'r,
From the dead ashes of a flower,
Some faint resemblance to produce,
But not the virtue. Swift.

I cannot help remarking the resemblance between him and our author in qualities, fame, and fortune. Pope.

2. Something resembling.

The sensible things, which religion hath allowed, are resemblances formed according to things spiritual, whereunto they serve as a hand to lead, and a way to direct. Hooker.

Fair is resemblance of thy maker fair,
Thine all things living gave on. Milton.

They are but weak resemblances of our intentions, faint and imperfect copies that may acquaint us with the general design, but can never express the life of the original. Addison.

TO RESEMBLE. v. a. [resembler, French.]

1. To compare; to represent as like something else.

Molt lately may we resemble ourselves to God, in respect of that pure faculty, which is never tainted from the love of God. Raleigh.

The torrid parts of Africa are resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whole spots represent the disperseness of habitations. Brewster.

2. To be like; to have likeness to.

If we see a man of virtues, mixed with infirmities, fall into misfortune, we are afraid that the like misfortunes may happen to ourselves, who resemble the character. Addison.

TO RESEND. v. a. [re and send.] To send back; to send again. Not in use.

I sent to her, by this fume come back,
Tokens and letters, which he did resend. Shaksp.

TO RESENT. v. a. [resentir, French.]

1. To take well or ill.

A ferrous consideration of the mineral treasures of his territories, and the practical discoveries of them by way of my philosophical theory, he then so well resented, that afterwards, upon a mature digestion of my whole design, he commanded me to let your lordships understand, how great an inclination he hath to further to his useful work. Bacon.

To be absent from any part of public worship he thus deeply resented. Fell.

2. To take ill; to consider as an injury or affront. This is now the most usual sense.

Thou with scorn
And anger would'st resent the offer'd wrong. Milton.
Such proceedings have been always resented, and often punished in this kingdom. Davenant.

RESENTER. n. f. [from resent.] One who feels injuries deeply.

The earl was the worst philosopher, being a great resenter, and a weak dissembler of the least disgrace. Watson.

RESENTFUL. adj. [resent and full.] Malicious; easily provoked to anger, and long retaining it.

RESENTINGLY. adv. [from resenting.]

1. With deep sense; with strong perception.

Hylobares judiciously and resentingly recapitulates your main reasonings. Mora.

2. With continued anger.

RESENTMENT. n. f. [resentiment, Fr.]

1. Strong perception of good or ill.

He retains vivid resentments of the more solid morality.

Some faces we admire and dont on; others, in our impartial apprehensions, no less deserving, we can behold without resentment, yea, with an invincible disregard. Glanville.

What he hath of sensible evidence, the very grand work of his communication is but the knowledge of his own resentment; but how the same things appear to others, they only know that are conscious to them; and how they are in themselves, only he that made them. Glanville.

2. Deep sense of injury; anger long continued; sometimes simply anger.

Can heavenly minds such high resentment show,
Or exercise their spite in human woe? Dryden.

I cannot, without some envy, and a just resentment, grieve the opposite conduct of others, reflect upon that generosity, wherewith the heads of a struggling faction treat those who will undertake to hold a pen in their defence. Swift.

Though it is hard to judge of the hearts of people, yet where they declare their resentment, and unfeignedly at any thing, there they put the judgment upon themselves. Law.

RESERVATION. n. f. [reservation, Fr.]

1. Reserve; concealment of something in the mind.

Nor had I any reservations in my own soul, when I passed that bill, nor repentings after. K. Charles.

We treat with Jesuitical equivocations and mental reservations. Smollett.

2. Something kept back; something not given up.

Ourself by monthly course,
With reservation of an hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Shakspere.

This is academical reservation in matters of easy truth, or rather sceptical infidelity against the evidence of reason. Brown.

These opinions Steele and his faction are endeavouring to propagate among the people concerning the present ministry; with what reservation to the honour of the queen, I cannot determine. Swift.

3. Custody; state of being treasured up.

He will'd me,
In heedful reservation, to bestow them
As notes, whole faculties inclusive were,
More than they of woe. Shakspere.

RESERVATORY. n. f. [reservoir, French.]

Place in which any thing is reserved or kept.

How I got such notice of that subterranean reservoir as to make a computation of the water now concealed therein, peruse the propositions concerning earthquakes. Woodward.

TO RESERVE. v. a. [reserver, Fr. reservo, Latin.]

1. To keep in store; to save to some other purpose.

I could add many probabilities of the names of places; but they should be too long for this, and I reserve them for another. Spenser.

Hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the day of trouble? Job.

David houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them for on hundred chariots. 2 Samuel.

Flowers
Reserved from night, and kept for thee in store. Milton.

2. To retain; to keep; to hold.

Reserve thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous rashness. Shakspere.

Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Jeremiah.

3. To lay up to a future time.

The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. 2 Peter.

The branch tremble like the scissures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to clothe it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence. Decay of Piety.

Conceal your esteem and love in your own breast, and reserve your kind looks and language for private hours. Swift.

RESERVE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Store kept untouched, or undiscovered.

The assent may be withheld upon this suggestion, that I know not yet all that may be said; and therefore, though I be beaten, it is not necessary I should yield, not knowing what forces there are in a reserve, being.

2. Something kept very exigent.

The virgin, besides the oil in their lamps, carried likewise a reserve to some other vessel for continual supply. 2 Kings.

Things are managed by advocates, who sometimes seek conquest, and not justice, and raise all reserves of law to support an unrighteous cause. Killbuck.

3. Something concealed in the mind.

However any one may conceive in the general scheme, it is still with certain reserves and deviations, and with a salvo to his own private judgment. Locke.

4. Exception; prohibition.

Is knowledge to be dispensed?
Or envy, or what reserve forbids to taste? Mack.

5. Exception in favour.

Each has some darling link, which pleases the reserve, and which they would fain reconcile the expectations of religion. Re.

6. Modesty; caution in personal behaviour.

Ever guardian thought could bring its feather'd
My soul inpro'd, and from herself dry'd,
Left all reserves, and all the sex behind. Pr.

RESERVED. adj. [from reserve.]

1. Modest; not freely free.

To all obliging, yet reserved to all,
None could himself the favour'd lover call. Wall.

Fame is a bubble the reserved enjoy,
Who strive to grasp it, as they touch, decay. Yates.

2. Sullen; not open; not frank.

Nothing reserved or sullen was to see,
But sweet regards. Dryd.

RESERVEDLY. adv. [from reserved.]

1. Not with frankness; not with openness; with reserve.

I must give only short hints, and write but a scarcely and reservedly, until I have opportunity express my sentiments with greater openness and perspicuity. Woodward.

2. Scrupulously; coldly.

He speaks reservedly, but he speaks with force.
Nor can a word be chang'd but for a worse. P.

RESERVEDNESS. n. f. [from reserved.]

Closeness; want of frankness; want of openness.

Observe their gravity
And their reservedness, their many emotions Fitting their persons. Ben Jonson.

By formality, I mean something more than ceremony and compliment, even a solemn reservedness, which may well consist with honesty. Hume.

There was great warmth and reservedness, as to great jealousy of each other, that they had a mind to give or receive visits. Clarendon.

Diffimulation can but just guard a man with the compass of his own personal concerns, who yet may be more effectually done by that direct and reservedness, that every man may manage his practice. Locke.

RESERVER. n. f. [from reserve.] One who reserves.

RESERVOIR. n. f. [reservoir, Fr.] Place where any thing is kept in store.

There is not a spring or fountain, but are provided with huge cisterns and reservoirs of ice and snow-water. Addison.

Who sees pale Mammon pine amidst his store,
Sees but a backward steward for the poor;
This year a reservoir, to keep and spare;
The next, a fountain spouting through his hair. Pope.

TO RESETTLE. v. a. [re and settle.] To settle again.

With the house of Austria yield the least part, even of usurped prerogative, to resettle the mediocrity of those princes in the alliance, who are alarmed at the consequences of the emperor's death. De Witt.

RESETTLEMENT. n. f. [from resettle.]

1. The act of settling again.

To the quieting of my passions, and the resettle and of my disappointed soul, I consider that grief is the worst absurd of all the passions. Norris.

1. The state of settling again.
Some roll their cask to mix it with the lees, and after a respite, they rack it. Morimer.

RESISTANCE, n. f. [from resistant.] Resistance; abode; dwelling. Resistance and resistant are now only used in law.

The king forthwith banished all Flemings out of his kingdom, commanding his merchant adventurers, which had a resiance in Antwerp, to return. Bacon.

RESISTANT, adj. [resistant, Fr.] Resident; present in a place.

Solyman was come as far as Sophia, where the Passagere lieutenant in Europe is always resistant, before that the Hungarians were aware. Knales.

Tis enough to lose the legacy, or the residuary advantage of the estate left him by the decease. Ayliffe.

RESIDUOUS, n. f. [residu, Fr. residuum, Lat.]

The remaining part; that which is left.

The residue are all such as esop the most valuable parts of the blood, and fix the refuse. Arbuclose.

TO RESIGNE, v. a. [re and seige, French.]

To seat again. Obsolete.

In wretched prison long he did remain,

Till they outreigned had their utmost date,

And then therein resigned was again, Spenser.

TO RESIGN, v. a. [resigner, Fr. resigno, Lat.]

1. To give up a claim or possession.

Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held. Shaksp.

I'll to the king, and signify to him,

That thus I have resigned to you my charge. Shaksp.

To her thou didst resign thy place. Milton.

Phœbus resigns his darts, and Jove

His thunder, to the god of love. Denham.

Every Hyæna would resign her breast;

And every dear Hippolytus be blest. Prior.

2. To yield up.

Whoever shall resign their reasons, either from the root of deceit in themselves, or inability to resist such trivial iniquations from others, although their condition may place them above the multitude, yet are they still within the line of vulgarity. Brown.

Diffident to resign and render back

All I receiv'd. Milton.

Those, who always resign their judgment to the last man they heard or read, truth never sinks into those men's minds; but, camelion-like, they take the colour of what is laid before them, and as soon lose and resign it to the next that comes in their way. Locke.

3. To give up in confidence: with up emphatical.

What more reasonable, than that we should in all things resign up ourselves to the will of God? Tillotson.

4. To submit; particularly to submit to providence.

Happy the man, who studies nature's laws,

His mind possessing in a quiet state,

Fearless of fortune, and resigned to fate. Dryden.

A firm, yet cautious mind,

Sincere, though prudent; constant, yet resigned. Pope.

5. To submit without resistance or murmur.

What thou art, resign to death. Shakspare.

The resignation of thy state and crown. Shakspare.

He intended to procure a resignation of the rights of the king's in yety's sisters and others, entitled to the possession of the crown. Hagyard.

2. Submission; unresisting acquiescence.

We cannot expect, that any one should readily quit his own opinion, and embrace ours, with a blind resignation to an authority, which the understanding acknowledges not. Locke.

There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as passiveness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery, that very few will recover themselves out of it. Addison.

3. Submission without murmur to the will of God.

RESIGNER, n. f. [from resign.] One that resigns.

RESIGNMENT, n. f. [from resign.] Act of resigning.

RESILIENCE, n. f. [from resilio, Latin.]

RESILIENCY, n. f. The act of starting or leaping back.

When strike a ball full long, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resilience in echoes, that is, whether a man shall hear better if he stand above the body repelling, than if he stand where he speaketh, may be tried. Bacon.

RESILIENT, adj. [resiliens, Lat.] Starting or springing back.

RESILIATION, n. f. [resilio, Latin.] The act of springing back; resilience.

RESIN, n. f. [resin, Fr. resina, Latin.]

The fat sulphurous parts of some vegetable, which is natural or procured by art, and will incorporate with oil or spirit, not an aqueous menstruum. Those vegetable substances that will dissolve in water are gums, those that will not dissolve and mix but with spirits or oil are resins. Quincy.

RESINOUS, adj. [from resin; resinex, Fr.]

Containing resin; consisting of resin.

Resinous gums, dissolved in spirit of wine, are let fall again, if the spirit be copiously diluted. Boyle.

TO RESIST, v. a. [resisto, Latin; resister, French.]

1. To oppose; to act against.

Submit to God: resist the devil, and he will flee. James.

To do all our sole delight

As being the contrary to his high will Whom we resist. Milton.

Not more almighty to resist our might,

Than wife to frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milt.

Some forms, tho' bright, no mortal man can bear, Some, none resist, tho' not exceeding fair. Young.

2. To not admit impression or force.

Nor can our soul cold resist that edge. Milton.

TO RESIST, v. n. To make opposition.

All the regions

Do seemingly revolt; and, who resist, Are mock'd for valiant ignorance, And perish constant fools. Shakspare.

RESISTANCE, n. f. [resistance, French.]

RESISTENCE, n. f. This word, like many others, is differently written, as it is supposed to have come from the Latin or the French.]

1. The act of resisting; opposition.

Demetrius, seeing that the land was quiet, and that no resistance was made against him, sent away all his forces. 1 Maccabees.

2. The quality of not yielding to force or external impression.

The resistance of bone to cold is greater than of flesh, for that the flesh shanketh, but the bone resisteth, when by the cold becometh more eager. Bacon.

Musick to soften and disarms the mind,

That not an arrow does resistance find. Waller.

The idea of solidity we receive by our touch and it arises from the resistance which we find in body to the entrance of any other body into the place it possesses. Locke.

But that part of the resistance, which arises from the vis inertia, is proportional to the density of the matter, and cannot be diminished by dividing the matter into smaller parts, nor by any other means, than by decreasing the density of the medium. Newton.

RESISTIBILITY, n. f. [from resistible.]

1. Quality of resisting.

Whether the resistibility of Adam's reason did not equivalet the facility of Eve's seduction, we refer unto schoolmen. Bacon.

The same body, being the complex idea of extension and resistibility, together, in the same subject, these two ideas are not exactly one and the same. Locke.

2. Quality of being resistible.

It is from corruption, and liberty to do evil, meeting with the resistibility of this succulent grace, that one resists it. Hammond.

RESISTIBLE, adj. [from resist.] That may be resisted.

That is irresistible; this, though potent, yet is in its own nature resistible by the will of man; though it many times prevails by its efficacy. Blau.

RESISTLESS. adj. [from resist.] Irresistible; that cannot be opposed.

Our own eyes do every where behold the sudden and resistless assaults of death. Raleigh.
All at once to force resistless way. Milton.

Since you can love, and yet your error see,
The same resistless power may plead for me. Dryden.
She hang'd her state;

Resistless in her love, as in her hate. Dryden.
Though thine eyes resistless glances dart,
A stronger charm is thine, a generous heart. Logic.

RESOLVABLE. adj. [from resolve.]

1. That may be referred or reduced.

Pride is of such intimate connection with ingratitude, that the actions of ingratitude seem directly referable into pride, as the principal reason of them. South.

2. Dissoluble; admitting separation of parts.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates, so as to turn it horny like parchment. Arbuthnot.

3. Capable of solution, or of being made less obscure.

The effect is wonderful in all, and the causes best referable from observations made in the countries themselves, the parts through which they pass. Brown.

RESOLUBLE. adj. [resoluble, Fr. re and solubilis, Lat.] That may be melted or dissolved.

There is not precisely the number of the distinct elements, whereunto mixt bodies are resolvable by fire. Boyle.

TO RESOLVE. v. a. [resolvo, Latin; resoudre, French.]

1. To inform; to free from a doubt or difficulty.

In all things then are our conferences best resolved, and in most agreeable sort unto God and nature resolved, when they are to far persuaded, as those grounds of persuasion will bear. Hooker.

Give me some breath,
Before I positively speak in this,
I will resolve your grace immediately. Shakespeare.
I cannot brook delay, resolve me now;
And what your pleasure is, shall totally me. Shaks.
Resolve me, strangers, whence and what you are? Dryden.

2. To solve; to clear.

Examine, list, and resolve their alleged proofs, till you come to the very root whence they spring, and it shall clearly appear, that the most which can be inferred upon such plenty of divine testimonies, is only this, that some things, which they maintain, do seem to have been out of scripture not absurdly gathered. Hooker.

I resolve the middle of their loyalty, and give them opportunity to let the world see, they mean not what they say, but what they say. A. Charles.
He always beat himself rather judiciously to resolve, than by doubts to perplex a business. Hayward.

The groovers, when they have attained to the knowledge of these repoles, will easily resolve those difficulties which perplex them. Dryden.
The man who would resolve the work of fate,
May limit number. Cicero.

Happiness, it was resolved by all, must be some one uniform end, proportional to the capacities of human nature, attainable by every man, independent on fortune. Rogers.

3. To settle in an opinion.

Good or evil actions, commanded or prohibited by laws and precepts divinely moral, may be resolved into some dictates and principles of the law of nature, imprinted on man's heart at the creation. White.
Long since we were resolved of your truth,
Your faithful service, and your toil in war, Shaks.

4. To fix in a determination. This sense is rather neutral, though in these examples the form be passive.

Good proof
This day affords, declaring thee resolved
To undergo with me one guilt. Milton.

I run to meet th' alarms,
Resolved on death, resolved to die in arms. Dryden.

Resolved for sea, the slaves thy baggage pack;
Nothing retards thy voyage, unless Thy other lord forbids voluptuousness. Dryden.

5. To fix in constancy; to confirm.

Quit presently the chapel, or resolve you
For more amusement:
I'll make the statue move. Shakespeare.

6. To melt; to dissolve.

Resolving is bringing a fluid, which is now concreted, into the state of fluidity again. Arbuthnot.
Vegetable salts resolve the coagulated humours of a human body, and attenuate, by simulating the solids, and dissolving the fluids. Arbuthnot.

7. To analyze; to reduce.

Into what can we resolve this strong inclination of mankind to this error? it is altogether unimaginable, but that the reason of so universal a consent should be constant. Tillotson.
Ye immortal souls, who once were men,
And now resolved to elements again. Dryden.

The deities turn upon this point, and resolve
All into a monarchial power at Rome. Darwin.
TO RESOLVE. v. n.

1. To determine; to decree within one's self.

Confirm'd, then I resolve Adam shall share with me. Milton.
Covenantments is like the sea, that receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back; therefore those, who have resolved upon the thriving sort of piety, have seldom embarked all their hopes in one bottom. Decay of Piety.

2. To melt; to be dissolved.

Have I not hideous death within my view?
Retaining but a quantity of life,
Which bleeds away, ev'n as a form of wax Resolveth from its figure? gauds the fire? Shakespeare.
No man condemn me, who has never felt
A woman's power, or try'd the force of love,
All tempers yield and soften in those fires,
Our honours, interests, resolving down,
Run in the gentle current of our joys. Southern.
When the blood stagnates in any part, it first coagulates, then resolves and turns alkaline. Arbuthnot.

3. To be settled in opinion.

Let men resolve of that as they please; this every intelligent being must grant, that there is something that is himself, that he would have happy. Locke.

RESOLVE. n. f. [from the verb.] Resolution; fixed determination.

I'm glad, you thus continue your resolve,
To suck the sweets of facet philology. Shaks.
When he sees

Himself by dogs, and dogs by men pursu'd,
He bright revokes his bold resolve, and more Repents his courage, than his fear before. Denham.
Cæsar's approach has tun'd him up together,
And Rome attends her fate from our resolves. Addis.
RESOLVELY. adv. [from resolved.] With firmness and constancy.

A man may be resolutely patient unto death; so that it is not the docility of resolution, which makes the virtue, nor the extremity, which makes the vice. Green.

RESOLVEDNESS. n. f. [from resolved.] Resolution; constancy; firmness.

This resolvedness, this high fortitude in sin, can with no reason be imagined a preparative to its remission. Decay of Piety.

RESOLVENT. n. f. [resolvens, Lat.] That which has the power of causing solution.

In the beginning of inflammation, they require repellants; and in the increase, somewhat of resolvents ought to be mixed. Wise.

Lactescent plants, as lettuce and endive, contain wholesome juice, solvent of the bile, modyne and cooling. Arbuthnot.

RESOLVER. n. f. [from resolve.]

1. One that forms a firm resolution.
Thy resolutions were not before sincere; consequently God that saw that, cannot be thought to have justified that unsincere resolver; that dead faith. Hammond.

2. One that dissolves; one that separates parts.

It may be doubted, whether or no the first is genuine and universal resolver of mixed bodies. Boyle.

RESOLUTE. adj. [resolu, Fr.] Determined; fixed; constant; steady; firm.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
The pow'r of man; for none of woman born Shall harm Macheth. Shakespeare.

Edward is at hand
Ready to fight; therefore be resolute. Shakespeare.

RESOLUTELY. adv. [from resolute.] Determinately; firmly; constantly; steadily.

We resolutely null,
To the few virtues that we have, be just. Rapin.

A man, who lives a virtuous life, despises the pleasures of sin, and notwithstanding all the allurements of sense persists resolutely in his course. Tillotson.
Some of those facts he examines, some he resolutely denies; others he endeavours to extend, and the rest he distorts with unimpaired terms. Shaks.

RESOLUTENESS. n. f. [from resolute.] Determinateness; state of being fixed in resolution.

All that my resoluteness to make use of my ears, not tongue, could do, was to make them acquire. Boyle.

RESOLUTION. n. f. [resolutio, Lat. resoluto, French.]

1. Act of clearing difficulties.

In matters of antiquity, if their originals of the due relation, they fall into great obscurities, and such as future ages seldom reduce into a resolution. Brown.

Vints, whether of civility, or for resolution of conference, or information in points of difficulty, were numerous. Ford.

The unravelling and resolution of the difficulties that are met with in the execution of the design, are the end of an action. Dryden.

2. Analysis; act of separating any thing into constituent parts.

To the present impulses of sense, memory, and instinct, all the sagacities of brutes may be reduced; though witty men, by analytical resolution, have chymically extracted an artificial logic out of all their actions. Hale.

3. Dissolution.

In the hot springs of extreme cold countries, the first heats are insufferable, which proceed out of the resolution of humidity congealed. Digh.

4. [from resolute.] Fixed determination; settled thought.

I th' progress of this business,
For a determinate resolution,
The bishop did require a respite. Shakespeare.

O Lord, resolutions of future reforming do us always satisfy thy justice, nor prevent thy vengeance for former miscarriages. King Charles.

We spend our days in deliberating, and we end them without coming to any resolution. Plutarch.
How much this is in every man's power, by making resolutions to himself, is only to try. Locke.

The mode of the will, which answers to deliberation, may be called suspension; that which answers to invention, resolution; and that which, in the phantastick will, is obstinacy, is constancy in the intellectual. Green.

5. Constancy; firmness; steadiness in good or bad.

The rest of the Helots, which were otherwise scattered, bent thitherward, with a new life of resolution; as if their captain had been a root, out of which their courage had sprung. Sidney.

I would fain state myself to be in a due resolution. Shakespeare.

They, who governed the parliament, had the resolution to act those monstrous things. Clarendon.
What reinforcement we may gain from hope, if not what resolution from despair. Milton.

6. Determination of a cause in courts of justice.

Nor have we all the acts of parliament or of judicial resolutions, which might occasion such alterations. Hale.

RESOLUTIVE. adj. [resolutus, Lat. resolutif, Fr.] Having the power to dissolve or relax.

RESONANCE. n. f. [from resono, Latin.]

I always loved and respected sir William. Swift.

3. To have relation to; as, the allusion respects an ancient custom.

4. To look toward.

The needle doth vary, as it approacheth the pole; whereas, were there such direction from the rocks, upon a nearer approachment, it would more directly respect them. Brown.

Palladius adviseth, the front of his house should so respect the south, that in the first angle it receive the rising rays of the winter sun, and decline a little from the winter setting thereof. Bennet.

RESPE'CT. n. f. [respect, French; respectus,
Latin.]

1. Regard; attention.
You have too much respect upon the world;
They lose it, that do buy it with much care. Shakspere.

I have

My country's good with a respect more tender
Than mine own life. Shakspere.

2. Reverence; honour.

You know me dutiful, therefore
Let me not shame respect; but give me leave
To take that course by your content and voice. Shakspere.

Aneas must be drawn a suppliant to Dido, with respect in his gestures, and humility in his eyes. Dryden.

I found the king abandon'd to neglect;
Seen without awe, and serv'd without respect. Prior.

The same men treat the Lord's-day with as little respect, and make the advantage of rest and leisure from their worldly affairs only an instrument to promote their pleasure and diversions. Nelson.

3. Awful kindness.

He, that will have his son have a respect for him,
must have a great reverence for his son. Locke.

Groaning under this age's yoke,
Have with'd, that noble Brutus had his eye. Shaksp.

7. Manner of treating others.

You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin to their persons, not errors. Bacon.

The duke's carriage was to the gentlemen of fair respect, and bountiful to the soldier, according to any special value which he spied in any. Watson.

8. Consideration; motive.

Whatever secret respects were likely to move them, for contenting of their minds, Calvin returned. Hooker.

The love of him, and this respect beside;
For that my grandfather was an Englishman,
Awakes my conscience to confute all this. Shaksp.

Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife. Shakspere.

9. Relation; regard.

In respect of the factors which attend you, do them what right in justice, and with as much speed
as you may. Bacon.

There have been always monsters amongst them,
in respect of their bodies. Wilkes.

I have represented to you the excellency of the christian religion, in respect of its clear discoveries of the nature of God, and in respect of the perfection of its laws. Tillotson.

Every thing which is imperfect, as the world must be acknowledged in many respects, had some cause which produced it. Tillotson.

They believed but one supreme deity, which,
with respect to the various benefits men received from him, had several titles. Tillotson.

RESPECTABLE. adj. [respectable, Fr.]
Venerable; meriting respect.

RESPECTER. n. f. [from respect.] One that has partial regard.

Neither is any condition more honourable in the sight of God than another; other wise he would be a respector of persons; for he hath proposed the same salvation to all. Swift.

RESPECTFUL. adj. [respect and full.]

Ceremonious; full of outward civility.

Will you be only, and forever mine?
From this dear bosom shall I ne'er be torn?
Or you grow cold, *respe*ful, or torn? Prior.

With humble joy, and with *respect*ful tears,
The listening people shall his story hear. Prior.

RESPECTFULLY. adv. [from respectful.]

ful*.] The quality of being respectful.

RESPECTIVE. adj. [from respect.]

1. Particular; relating to particular persons or things.

Moses mentions the immediate causes, and St.
Peter the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens, and that constitution of the earth, in reference to their respective waters, which made that world obvious to a deceit. Bacon.

When so many present themselves before their respective magistrates to take the oath, it may not be improper to awaken a due sense of their engagements. Addison.

2. [respectif, Fr.] Relative; not absolute.

The medium intended is not an absolute, but a relative medium, the proportion recommended to all is the same; but the things to be desired in this proportion will vary. Rogers.

3. Worthy of reverence. Not in use.

What should it be, that he respects in her,?
But I can make respectif in myself. Shakspere.

4. Careful; cautious; attentive to consequences. Obsolete.

Respective and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and wish that the world may go well to it be not long of them, than with pain, and labour make themselves advisers for the common good.

Hooker.

He was exceeding respectful and praiseworthy. Radleigh.
RESPECTIVELY, adv. [from respectivus.]

2. Particularly; as each belongs to each.
The interruption of trade between the English and French began to pinch the merchants of both nations, which moved them by all means to dispose their several respects to open the intercourse again. Bacon.

The impressions from the objects of the senses do mingle respectively every one with his kind. Bacon.
Good and evil are in morality, as the east and west are in the frame of the world, founded in and divided by that fixed and unalterable situation, which they have respectively in the whole body of the universe. South.

The principles of those governments are respectively disclaimed and abhorred by all the men of sense and virtue in both parties. Addison.

2. Relatively; not absolutely.

It there had been no other choice, but that Adam had been left to the universal, Moses would not then have had, eastward in Eden, seeing the world hath not east nor west, but respectively. Radleigh.

3. Partially; with respect to private views. Obsolete.

Among the ministers themselves, one being so far in estimation above the rest, the voices of the rest were likely to be given for the most part respectively by a kind of secret dependency. Hooker.

4. With great reverence. Not in use.

Honest Flaminius, you are very respectively welcome. Shakspeare.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire,
The fainty knights were scorch'd. Dryden.

2. To catch breath.

Till breathless both themselves aside retire,
Where fuming wrath, their cruel talks they whet,
And trample th' earth the whiles they may respire. Spenser.

I, a prisoner chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air impur'd also, close and damp,
Unwholesome draught; but here I feel amend,
The breath of heav'n fresh blowing, pure and sweet,
With day spring born; here leave me to respire. Milton.

3. To rest; to take rest from toil.

Hark! he strikes the golden lyre;
And for! the tortur'd ghosts respire,
See steady springs advance! Pope.

RESPIRE, n. f. [respiro, Fr.]

1. Reprieve; suspension of a capital sentence.

I had hope to spend
Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day,
That must be mortal to us both. Milton.

William and eloquence in vain would plead
One moment's respite for the learned head;
Judges of writings and of men have dy'd. Prior.

2. Pause; interval.

The tax then counsel'd th' apo, for to require
Respite till morrow t' answer his desire. Spenser.

This customary war, which troubleth all the world, giveth little respite or breathing time of peace, doth usually borrow pretence from the necessity, to make itself appear more honest. Raleigh.

Some pause and respite only I require,
Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire. Denham.

TO RESPITE, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To relieve by a pause.

In what hour or shade
Thou find'st him, from the heat of noon retir'd,
To respite his day-labour with repose,
Or with repose. Milton.

2. [respiro, old Fr.] To suspend; to delay.

An act pass'd for the satisfaction of the officers of the king's army, by which they were promised payment, in November following; till which time they were to respite, and be contented that the common soldiers and inferior officers should be satisfied upon their disbanning. Clarendon.

RESPLENDENCE, n. f. [from resplendere.]
RESPLENDENCY, n. f. [from resplendere.] Lustre; brightness; splendour.

Sun! thou in whom my glory I behold
In full resplendence, hear of all my night. Milton.
To neglect that supreme resplendency, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it in the creature, is as absurd as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion instead of adoring the sun. Boyle.

RESPLENDENT, adj. [resplendens, Lat.]

Bright; shining; having a beautiful lustre.

Rich in commodities, beautiful in situation,
resplendent in all glory. Camden.

Mind us of like repose. Milton.
My tort limbs are wearied into rest. Pope.

2. The final sleep; the quietness of death.

Oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears,
For David left him, when he went to rest,
His lyre. Dryden.

3. Stillness; cessation or absence of motion.

Putrefaction alketh rest; for the subtle matter which putrefaction requirith, is disturbed by a agitation. Bacon.

What cause mov'd the Creator, in his holy rest,
So late to build? Milton.

All things are past equally and perfectly at rest, and to this way of consideration of them are all one; whether they were before the world, or but yesterday. Locke.

4. Quiet; peace; cessation from disturbance.

Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. Matthew.

He giveth you rest from all your enemies. Deuteronomy.

'Scap'd from such storms of pow'r, holding out
To be below herself to be at rest. Dryden.

The root cut off, from whence these tangles rose, Pope.

He should have rest, the commonwealth repairs. Johnson.

Thus secur'd, but not at rest or ease of mind. Milton.

RES

Where can a frail man hide him? in what arms shall a short life enjoy a little rest?
With what a load of vengeance am I press'd,
Yet never, never, can I hope for rest;
For when my heavy burden I remove,
The weight falls down, and crushes her I love.

Like the sun, it had light and agility; it knew no rest but in motion, no quiet but in activity.

Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go.

The grave, where ev'n the great find rest.

5. Cessation from bodily labour.
There the weary be at rest.

The Christian chafeth for his day of rest the first day of the week; that he might thereby profess himself a servant of God, who on the morning of that day vanquished Satan.

6. Support; that on which any thing leans or rests.

Forth pick'd Florinda from the throng,
And 'gaunt Tancredie set her spear in rest.

A man may think, that a musket may be shot off as well upon the arm, as upon a rest; but when all is done, good counsel letteth business straight.

Their vizors clos'd, their lances in the rest,
Or at the helmet pointed, or the crest;
They speed the race.

Take the handle in your right hand, and clasping the blade of it in your left, lean it steadily upon the rest, holding the edge a little above the work, so as a corner of the thin side of the chisel may bear upon the rest, and the flat side of the chisel may make a small angle with the rest.

7. Place of repose.
Suff'ring'd by him with comforts, till we end
In dust, our final rest and native home.

8. Final hope.
Sea fights have been final to the war, but this is,
when princes set up their rest upon the battle.

This answer would render their counsels of less reverence to the people, it upon those reasons, they should recede from what they had, with that confidence and disdain of the house of peers, demanded of the king; they therefore resolved to let up their rest upon that stake, and to go through with it, or perish in the attempt.

9. [rele, Fr. quod restat, Lat.] Remainder; what remains.

Religion gives part of its reward in hand, the present comfort of having done our duty; and for the rest, it offers us the best security that heaven can give.

The pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known,
The rest a hunters.

REST, adj. [relex, Fr. quod restat, Lat.] Others; those not included in any proposition.

By description of their qualities, many things may be learned concerning the rest of the military.

They had no other consideration of the publick, than that no disturbance might interrupt their quiet in their own days; and that the rest, who had larger hearts and more publick spirits, would extend their labour, activity, and advice only to secure the empire at home by all possible arts.

Plato, and the rest of the philosophers, acknowledged the unity, power, wisdom, goodness, and providence of the supreme God.

Arm'd like the rest, the Trojan prince appears,
And by his pious labour urges them.

Upon a equal terms that they all stand, that no one had a tamer pretence of right than the rest.

To REST, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sleep; to be asleep; to slumber.

Fancy then retires
into her private cell, when nature rests.

2. To sleep the final sleep; to die.

Vol. II.

RES

Κοιμάται δὲ τὸν πόδα μου ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ.
Glad I'd lay me down,
As in my mother's lap; there I should rest,
And sleep secure.

3. To be at quiet; to be at peace; to be without disturbance.

From off the tossing of the fiery waves,
There rest, if any rest can harbour there.

4. To be without motion; to be still.

Over the tent a cloud shall rest by day.

5. To be fixed in any state of opinion.

He will not rest content, though thou givest
many gifts.

Every creature has a share in the common blessings of providence; and every creature should rest well satisfied with its proportion in them.

After such a loud rest secure,
Thou wilt not foreign ruin or Trojan load endure.

There yet survives the lawful heir
Of Sauch's blood, whom, when I shall produce,
I rest assur'd to see you pale with fear.

6. To cease from labour.

Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest.

The ark went before, to search out a resting place for them.

From work
Resting, he blest the seventh day.

When you enter into the regions of death, you rest from all your labours and your fears.

7. To be satisfied; to acquiesce.

To urge the foe to battle,
Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair,
Were to refuse the awards of providence,
And not to rest in heaven's determination.

8. To lean; to recline for support or quiet.

On him I rested,
And, not without confiding, fix'd my fate.

Sometimes it rests upon testimony, when testimony of right has nothing to do; because it is easier to believe, than to be scientifically instructed.

The philosophical use of words conveys the precise notions of things, which the mind may rest upon, and be satisfied with, in its search after knowledge.

9. [resto, Lat. rester, Fr.] To be left; to remain.

Full'n he is; and now
What rests, but that the mortal sentence pass
On his transgression?

There rests the comparative, that is, as being granted, that it is either lawful or binding, yet whether other things be not preferred before it, as extirpation of heretics.

To REST, v. a.

1. To lay to rest.

Your piety has paid
All needfulness, to rest my wand'ring shade.

2. To place as on a support.

As the vex'd world, to find repose, at last,
Itself into Augustus' arms did cast;
So England now doth, with like toil oppress'd,
Her weary head upon your bosom rest.

The protestants having well studied the fathers, were now willing to rest their cause, not upon scripture only, but fathers too; so far at least as the three first centuries.

Here rests his head upon the lap of earth,
A youth to fortune and to fame unknown.

RESTAGNANT, adj. [restagnans, Latin.]
Remaining without flow or motion.

Upon the tops of high mountains, the air, which bears against the restagnant quicksilver, is less pressed by the less ponderous incumbent air.

To RESTAGNATE, v. n. [re and stagnate.] To stand without flow.

The blood returns thick, and is apt to restagnate.

RESTAGNATION, n. f. [from restagnate.]
The state of standing without flow, course, or motion.

RESTAURATION, n. f. [restauratio, Latin.]

RES

The act of recovering to the former state.

Adam is in us an original cause of our nature,
and of that corruption of nature which causeth death; Christ is the cause original of restoration to life.

My dear father's restoration hang
Thy neck, me on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made.

Spiritualists will not admit a regeneration,
much less will they receive an integral restoration.

To RESTORE, v. a. [re and stem.] To force back against the current.

How they resten
Then backward, court, bearing with frank appearance Toward Cyprus.

RESTFUL, adj. [rest and full.] Quiet;
being at rest.

Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court,
As far as China to my uncle's head?

RESTH'ARROW, n. f. A plant.

RESTIFF, adj. [restif, Fr. restivo, Ital.] Unwilling to stir; resolute against going forward; obstinate; stubborn.

It is originally used of a horse, that, though not wearied, will not be driven forward.

All, who before him did ascend the throne,
Labour'd to draw three restless nations on.

This restless stubbornness is never to be excused under any pretence whosoever.

Some, with tedious care,
Their restful floods in tandy plains prepare.

The archangel, when discord was restful, and would not be drawn from her beloved monastery with fair words, drags her out with many stripes.

So James the drawy genius wakes
Of Britain, long entranc'd in charms,
Restless, and slumbering on its arms.

The pumper of rest will discipline disdain,
Impatient of the bath, and restful to the rein.

2. Being at rest; being less in motion.
Not used.

Pallies offend I apprehend upon the left side; the most vigorous part protesting itself, and protruding the matter upon the weaker and restful side.

RESTLESSNESS, n. f. [from restless.] Obstinate reluctance.

Overt virtues bring forth praise; but secret virtues bring forth torture: certain deliveries of a man's self, which the Spanish name denoteth, is partly expell'd, where there be not stands nor remains in a man's nature; but the wheels of his mind keep way with the wheels of his torture.

That it gave occasion to some men's further restlessness, is imputable to their own depraved tempers.

RESTINCTION, n. f. [restinctus, Latin.]
The act of extinguishing.

RESTITUTION, n. f. [restitutio, Latin.]

1. The act of restoring what is lost or taken away.

To subdue an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise or wrongful war, but a restitution of ancient rights with the crown of England, from whence they were most unjustly expelled and long kept out.

He would pawn his fortunes
To his wife's restitution, so he might Be call'd your conqueror.

He restitution to the value makes,
Nor pay in his extorted treasure takes.

Whoever has a collective real cause of doing a neighbour wrong, by what instrument soever he does it, is bound to make restitution.

In case our officers against God hath begun complained with injury to men, it is but reasonable we should make restitution.

A great man, who has never been known willingly to pay a just debt, ought not all of a sudden to be introduced, making restitution of thousands

he has cheated; let it suffice to pay twenty pounds to a friend, who has lost his note. Arbuthnot

8. The act of recovering its former state or posture.

In the woody parts of plants, which are their bones, the principles are so compounded, as to make them flexible without joints, and also elastic, that so their roots may yield to stones, and their trunks to the wind, with a power of restitution. Green

RESTLESSLY. adv. [from restless.] Without rest; unquietly.

When the mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, strains this power of the soul to apprehend, that to judge, whether to divide, a fourth to remember: thus tracing out the nice and scarce objects able difference of some things, and the real agreement of others; at length it brings all the ends of a long hypothesis together. South

RESTLESSNESS. n. f. [from restless.]

1. Want of sleep.

Restless and intermission from sleep, grieved persons are molested with, whereby the blood is dried. Harvey

2. Want of rest; unquietness.

Let him keep the rest, Let him be rich and weary, that at last, If goodness lead him not, yet weariness May toss him to my breast. Herbert

I fought my bed, in hopes relief to find, But restlessness was mistress of my mind. Harte

3. Motion; agitation.

The trembling restlessness of the needle, in any but the north point of the compass, manifests its inclination to the pole; which its wavering and its rest bear equal witness to. Boyle

RESTLESS. adj. [from rest.]

1. Being without sleep.

Restless he pass'd the remnants of the night, Till the fresh air proclaim'd the morning nigh: And burning ships, the martyrs of the fight, With quivering fires beheld the eastern sky. Dryden

2. Unquiet; without peace.

Ease to the body some, none to the mind From restless thoughts, that like a deadly swarm Of hornets arid, no sooner found alone, But rush upon me thronging, and prevent Times past, what once I was, and what I'm now. Milton

Could we not wake from that lethargic dream, But to be restless in a worse extreme? Denham

We find our souls disordered and restless, tossed and disquieted by passions, ever seeking happiness in the enjoyments of this world, and ever missing what they seek. Atterbury

What tongue can speak the restless monarch's woes, When God and Nathan were declar'd his foes? Prior

3. Unconstant; unsettled.

He was stout of courage, strong of hand, Bold was his heart, and restless was his tongue. Paisley

He's proud, fantastick, apt to change, Restless at home, and ever prone to rage. Dryden

4. Not still; in continual motion.

How could nature on their orbs impose Such restless revolution, day by day Repeated? Milton

RESTORABLE. adj. [from restore.] What may be restored.

By cutting turf without any regularity, great quantities of restorable land are made utterly desolate. Swift

RESTORATION. n. f. [from restore; re- sanation, Fr.]

1. The act of replacing in a former state.

This is properly restoration. Hail, royal Arbion, hail to thee, Thy longing people's expectation! Sent from the gods to set us free From bondage and from usurpation: Behold the distant climes agree, Reposing in thy restoration. Dryden

The Athenians, now deprived of the only person that was able to recover their losses, repent of their rashness, and endeavour in vain for his restoration. Swift

2. Recovery.

The change is great in this restoration of the man, from a state of spiritual darkness, to a capacity of perceiving divine truth. Rogers

RESTORATIVE. adj. [from restore.] That has the power to recruit life.

Their taste no knowledge works at least of evil; But life preserves, destroys life's enemy, Hunger, with sweet restorative delight. Milton

RESTORATIVE. n. f. [from restore.] A medicine that has the power of recruiting life.

I will kiss thy lips; Happy gone poison yet doth hang on them, To make me die with a restorative. Shakespeare

God too it necessary by such mortifications to quench the boundless rage of an insatiable intemperance, to make the weakness of the flesh, the physic and restorative of the spirit. South

After milk is an excellent restorative in consumptions. Mortimer

He prescribes an English gallon of ass's milk, especially as a restorative. Arbuthnot

TO RESTORE. v. a. [restaurer, Fr. re- staurer, Latin.]

1. To give back what has been lost or taken away.

Restore the man his wife. Genesis

He shall restore in the principal, and add the fifth part more. Leviticus

She lands him on his native shores, And to his father's longing arms restores. Dryden

2. To bring back.

The father himself virtue shall restore, And crimes shall threat the guilty world no more. Dryden

Thus pencils can, by one slight touch, restore Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryden

3. To retrieve; to bring back from degeneration, declension, or ruin, to its former state.

Loss of Eden, till one greater man Restore it, and regain the blissful seat. Milton

The archangel paus'd Between the world destroy'd and world restor'd. Milton

These artificial experiments are but so many essays, whereby men attempt to restore themselves from the first general curse inflicted upon their labours. Wilkins

In his Odyssey, Homer explains, that the hardest difficulties may be overcome by labour, and our fortune restored after the severest afflictions. Prior

4. To cure; to recover from disease.

Garth, sifter than a plague destroys, restores. Graville

5. To recover passages in books from corruption.

RESTORER. n. f. [from restore.] One that restores; one that recovers the lost, or repairs the decayed.

Next to the Son, Destin'd restorer of mankind, by whom New heav'n and earth shall to the ages rise. Milton

I foretell you, as the restorer of poetry. Dryden

Here are ten thousand persons reduced to the necessity of a low diet and moderate exercise, who are the only great restorers of our breed, without which, the nation would in an age become one great hospital. Swift

TO RESTRAIN. v. a. [restrindre, Fr. restringo, Latin.]

1. To withhold; to keep in.

If the restrain'd the roots of your followers, 'Tis to such which come and as clears her. Shaksp.

The gods will plague thee, That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which To a mother's part belongs. Shaksp.

2. To repress; to keep in awe.

The law of nature would be in vain, if there were no body that, in the state of nature, had a power to execute that law, and thereby preserve the innocent and restrain offenders. Locke

That all men may be restrained from doing hurt to one another, the execution of the law of nature is in that state put into every man's hand, whereby every one has a right to punish the transgressors to such a degree as may hinder its violation. Locke

3. To suppress; to hinder; to repress.

Merciful powers! Refrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature Gives way to in repose. Shaksp.

Compassion gave him up to tears A space, till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milton

Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd, And pray'd me oft forbearance. Shaksp.

Though they two were committed, at least restrain'd of their liberty, yet this discover'd too much of the humour of the court. Clarendon

5. To hold in.

His horse, with a half checked bit, and a head-stall of sheep's leather, which being restrain'd, to keep him from stumbling, hath been often hurt, and now repaired with knots. Shaksp.

6. To limit; to confine.

We restrain it to those only duties, which all men, by force of natural wit, understand to be such duties as concern all men. Hobbes

Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity; whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot leave to itself the reversion of the very next minute? South

Not only a metaphysical or natural, but a moral universality also is to be restrained by a part of the predicate; as all the Italians are politicians, that is, those among the Italians, who are politicians, are subtle politicians; i. e. they are generally so. Watts

RESTRAINABLE. adj. [from restrain.]

Capable to be restrained.

Therein we must not deny a liberty; nor the hand of the painter more restrainable, than the pen of the poet. Brown

RESTRAIN'EDLY. adv. [from restrained.]

With restraint; without latitude.

That Christ's dying for all is the express doctrine of the scripture, is manifest by the world, which is a word of the widest extent, and although it be sometimes used more restrainedly, yet never doth signify a far smaller disproportionable part of the world. Hammond

RESTRAINER. n. f. [from restrain.] One that restrains; one that withholds.

If nothing can relieve us, we must with patience submit unto that restraint, and expect the will of the restrainer. Brown

RESTRAINT. n. f. [from restrain; re- straint, French.]

1. Abridgment of liberty.

She will well excuse, Why at this time the doors are barr'd against you: Depart in patience, And about evening come yourself alone, To know the reason of this strange restraint. Shaksp.

4. Repression; hinderance of will; act of withholding; state of being withheld.

RES

There is no restraint to the Lord to save, by many w by few.

Thus it shall befall

him who, to worth in woman overtrusting, Lays her will rule; restraint the will not brook. Milt.
Is there any thing which reflects a greater lustre upon a man's person, than a severe temperance, and a restraint of himself from vicious pleasures? South.
TO RESTRICT. v. a. [restringere, Latin.]
To limit; to confine. A word scarce English.

In the enumeration of constitutions in this chapter, there is not one that can be limited and restricted by such a distinction, nor can perhaps the same period, in different circumstances, be properly confined to one or the other. Arbutnot.

RESTRICTION. n. f. [restringere, French.] Confinement; limitation.

This is to have the same restriction with all other recreations, that it be made a diversion, and not a trade. Government of the Tongue.

From manufacture, of all others, ought the least to be encouraged in Ireland; or, if it be, it requires the most restriction to certain places. Temple.
All duties are matter of conscience; with this restriction, that a superior obligation suspends the force of an inferior. L'Estrange.

Each other gift, which God on man bestows,
Its proper bounds and due restriction knows;
To use his'd purpose dedicates its power. Prior.
Celsus's rule, with the proper restrictions, is good for people in health. Arbutnot.

RESTRICTIVE. adj. [from restrict.]

1. Expressing limitation.

They, who would make the restrictive particle belong to the latter clause, and not to the first, do not attend to the reason. Stillington.

2. [restrictif, French.] Styptick; astringent.
I applied a plaster over it, made up with my common restrictive powder. Hesman.

RESTRICTIVELY. adv. [from restrictive.]
With limitation.

All speech, tending to the glory of God, or the good of man, is aright directed; which is not to be understood to restrictively, as if nothing but divinity or necessary concerns of life, may lawfully be brought into discourse. Government of the Tongue.
TO RESTRICT. v. a. [restringere, Latin.]

To confine; to contract; to altringe.

RESTRICT. n. f. [restringens, Latin;
restricting, French.] That which hath the power of contracting; styptick.

The two latter indicate phlebotomy for revul-sion, restrictings to flemch, and incrustations to the skin the blood. Harvey.

RESTY. adj. [restif, French.] Obsolete in standing still. See RESTIFF.

Come, our stomachs

Will make what's homely savoury, weariness
Can more upon the first, when resty both Lies the down pillow hard. Shakespeare.

Have not other hands been tried and found resty
but we stick at nothing. Davenant.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, and them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.

TO RESUBLIME. v. a. [re and sublime.] To sublime another time.

When mercury sublimated is resublimed with fresh mercury, it becomes mercurius dulcis, which is a white tasteless earth scarce dissolvable in water, and mercurius dulcis resublimed with part of salt returns into mercury sublimated. Newton.

TO RESUM. v. n. [resumer, French; resumo,
Latin.]

1. To fly back.

With many a weary step, and many a groan,
Up the high hill he heaves a huge round stone;
The huge round stone, resuming with a bound, Thunders impetuous down, and smould'rs along the ground. Pope.

2. [resalter, French.] To rise as a consequence; to be produced as the effect of causes jointly concurring.

RES

Rice prospers much, if set by a fig-tree; which is caused, not by reason of friendship, but by extraction of a contrary juice; the one drawing juice fit to resalt sweet, the other bitter. Bacon.

Such huge extremes, when nature doth unite,
Wonder from thence resalts, from thence delight. Denham.

Upon the dissolution of the first earth, this very face of things would immediately resalt. Burnet.
Pleasure and peace do naturally resalt from a holy and good life. Talbot.

The horror of an object may overbear the pleasure *resalt*ing from its greatness. Addison.
Their effects are often very disproportionate to the principles and parts that resalt from the analysis. Baker.

3. To arise as a conclusion from premises.

RESUM. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Resilience; act of flying back.

Sound is produced between the string and the air;
by the return of the resalt of the string, which was flamed by the touch to its proper place. Bacon.

2. Consequence; effect produced by the concurrence of co-operating causes.

Did my judgment tell me, that the propositions sent to me were the resalts of the major part of the votes, I should then not suspect my own judgment for not speedily concurring with them. K. Charles.

As in perfumes, compos'd with art and cost,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost,
Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich resalt of all.

So she was all a sweeter, whose every part,
In due proportion mix'd, proclaim'd the maker's
art. Dryden.

Buying of land is the resalt of a full and satiated gain: men in trade seldom lay out money upon land, till their profit has brought in more than trade can employ. Locke.

3. Inference from premises.
These things are a resalt or judgment upon facts. South.

4. Resolve; decision. Improper.
Rude, passionate, and mistaken resalts have, at certain times, fallen from great assemblies. Scott.

RESUM. n. f. [resurgence, French.]
The act of resuming.

RESUMABLE. adj. [from resume.] What may be taken back.

This was but an indulgence, and therefore resumable by the victor, unless there intervened any capitulation to the contrary. Hale.

TO RESUME. v. a. [resumo, Latin.]

1. To take back what has been given.
The sun, like this, from which our light we have,
Gaz'd on too long, & glazes the light he gave. Denham.

Sees not my love, how time resumes
The glory which he lent their flow'rs;
I though none should take of their perfumes,
Yet must they live but some few hours.

Time, what we loathe, devours. Waller.

2. To take back what has been taken away.
That opportunity,
Which then they had to tal'cation's, to resume
We have again. Shakespeare.

They resume what has been obtained fraudulently,
by surprise and upon wrong suggestions. Davenant.

3. To take again.

Princes, if they are ambitious men, should handle it so, as they be still progressive, and not retrograde. Bacon.

2. Contrary; opposite.

Your intent
In going back to school to Wittenberg,
It is most retrograde to our desire. Shakspeare.

3. In astronomy, planets are retrograde, when, by their proper motion in the zodiac, they move backward, and contrary to the succession of the signs; as from the second degree of Aries to the first: but this retrogradation is only apparent and occasioned by the observer's eye being placed on the earth; for to an eye at the sun, the planet will appear always direct, and never either stationary or retrograde. Harris.

Their wandering course, now high, now low, then hid,
Progressive, retrograde, or standing still,
In six thou years. Milton.

Two geometrick figures were display'd,
One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryden.

To RETROGRADE. v. n. [retrogradior, Fr. retro and gradior, Lat.] To go backward.

The race and period of all things here is to turn things more pneumatical and rare, and not to retrograde from pneumatical to that which is dense. Bacon.

RETROGRESSION. n. f. [retro and gressus, Lat.] The act of going backward.

The account, established upon the rule and descent of the stars, can be no reasonable rule unto distant nations, and by reason of their retrogression, but temporary unto any one. Brown.

RETROMINGENCY. n. f. [retro and mingo, Lat.] The quality of staling backwards.

The last foundation was retromingency, or pissing backwards; for men observing both sexes to urinate backwards, or averily between their legs, they might conceive there were feminine parts in both.

RET

RETROMINGENT. adj. [retro and mingo, Lat.] Staling backward.

By reason of the backward position of the female parts of quadrupeds, they can hardly admit the substitution of masculine generations, except a be in retromingents. Brown.

RETROSPECT. n. f. [retro and specio, Lat.] Look thrown upon things behind or things past.

As you arraign his majesty by retrospect, so you condemn his government by second sight. Addison.

RETROSPECTION. n. f. [from retrospect.] Act or faculty of looking backward.

Canst thou take delight in viewing
This poor life's approaching ruin,
When thy retrospectum vult
Sees the glorious ages past?
Happy nation were we blind,
Or had only eyes behind. Swift.

RETROSPECTIVE. adj. [from retrospect.] Looking backward.

In vain the grave, with retrospective eye,
Would from th' apparent what conclude the why. Pope.

To RETUND. v. a. [retundo, Lat.] To blunt; to tarn.

Covered with skin and hair keeps it warm, being naturally a very cold part, and also to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke that shall be dealt it, and retard the edge of any weapon. Ray.

To RETURN. v. n. [retrourner, Fr.]

1. To come again to the same place.
Whoso rolleth a stone, it will return upon him. Proverbs.

On their embattl'd ranks the waves return Milton.

2. To come back to the same state.

If they returned out of bondage, it must be into a state of freedom. Locke.

3. To go back.

I am in blood
Stept in so far, that should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shakspeare.

To return to the business in hand, the use of a little insight in those parts of knowledge, is to accustom our minds to all sorts of ideas. Locke.

4. To make answer.

The thing of courage,
As round with rage, with rage doth sympathize;
And with an accent tun'd in self-same key,
Returns to chiding fortune. Shakspeare.

He said; and thus the queen of heaven return'd,
Must I, oh Jove, in bloody wars contend? Pope.

5. To come back; to come again; to revisit.

Thou to mankind
Be good, and friendly still, and oft return. Milton.

6. After a periodical revolution, to begin the same again.

With the year
Seasons return, but not to me returns
Day, or the sweet approach of ev'n or morn. Milton.

7. To retort; to recriminate.

If you are a malicious reader, you return upon me, that I affect to be thought more important than I am. Dryden.

To RETURN. v. a.

1. To repay; to give in requital.

Return him a trespass offering. 1 Samuel.

Thy Lord shall return thy wickedness upon thine own head. 1 Kings.

What peace can we return,
But to our power, hostility, and hate? Milton.

When answer none return'd, I set me down. Milton.

2. To give back.

What counsel give ye to return answer to this people? 2 Chronicles.

3. To send back.

RET

Reject not then what offer'd means; who knows
But God hath for before us, to return thee
Home to thy country and his sacred house? Milt.

4. To give account of.

Probably one fourth part more died of the plague than are returned. Granat.

5. To transmit.

Instead of a ship, he should levy money, and return the same to the treasurer for his majesty's use. Clarendon.

RET'RN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of coming back to the same place.

The king of France so suddenly gone back!
Something turns his coming forth is thought of,
That his return was now most necessary. Shaksp.

When forc'd from hence to view our parts he mounts,

Takes little journeys, and makes quick returns. Dryden

2. Retrogression.

Act of coming back to the same state.

At the return of the year, the king of Syria will come up. 1 Kings.

3. Revolution; vicissitude.

Weapons hardly fall under rule; yet even they have returns and vicissitudes; for ordnance was shown in the city of the Oxidracres in India, and what the Macedonians called thunder and lightning. Bacon.

Repayment of money laid out in commodities for sale.

As for any merchandize you have bought, ye shall have your return in merchandize or gold. Bacon.

As to roots as clustered in their tapers, there is the high price that those things bear, and the twitles of their returns; for, in some grounds, a radish comes in a month, that in others will not come in two, and so make double returns. Bacon.

Profit; advantage.

The fruit, from many days of recreation, is ery little; but from these few hours we spend in rayer, the return is great. Taylor.

Remittance; payment from a distant place.

Within these two months, I do expect return thrice three times the value of this bond. Shaksp.

Brokers cannot have lost money by them, than one twentieth part of their yearly returns. Lucet.

8 Repayment; retribution; requital.

You made my liberty your late request:

I too return due from a grateful breast?

I grow impatient, till I find some way,

Great offices, with greater to repay. Dryden.

Since these are some of the returns which we owe to God after obtaining our successes, can we reasonably presume, that we are in the favour of God? Atterbury.

Nothing better becomes a person in a publick character, than such a publick spirit; nor is there any thing likely to procure him larger returns of favour. Atterbury.

Returns, like these, our mistress bids us make.

When from a foreign prince a gift her Britons take.

Prior.

Ungrateful lord!

Would'st thou invade my life, as a return

For proffer'd love? Rome.

9. Act of restoring or giving back; restitution.

The other ground of God's sole property in any thing, is the gift, or rather the return of it made by man to God. South.

10. Relapse.

This is breaking into a constitution to serve a present expedient; the remedy of an empyrick, to ease the present pain, but with certain prospect of certain returns. Swift.

11. [retour, French.]

Either of the adjoining sides of the front of an house, or ground-plot, is called a return side.

Moxon.

Both these sides are not only returns, but parts of the front, and a stately tower in the middle of the front. Bacon.

12. Report; account: the sheriff's return,

REV

RET'URNABLE. adj. Allowed to be reported back. A law term.

It may be decided in that court where the verdict is returnable. Hale.

He shall have an attachment against the sheriff, directed to the coroner, and returnable into the king's bench. Ayliffe.

RET'URNER. n. f. [from return.] One who pays or remits money.

The chapmen, that give highest for this, can make most profit by it, and those are the returners of our money. Locke.

RET'URNLESS. adj. Admitting no return;

irremovable.

But well knew the truth
Of this thine owne returne, though all my friends,
I knew as well should make returnless cuds. Chapman.

REVE. n. f. The bailiff of a franchise or manor.

The reve, the miller, and the muncing lady prooves speak in character. Dryden.

To REVEAL. v. a. [revelo, Lat. reveler,

French.]

1. To show; to discover; to lay open; to disclose a secret.

Be assured: speaking again that which thou hast heard, and revealing of secrets. Eccelesiasticus.

I fight was the wound, the prince's cure unknown,
She might not, would not yet reveal her own. Waller.

The answer to one who asked what time was, fi non regis intelligo; that is, the more I think of time, the less I understand it; might persuade one, that time, which reveals all other things, is itself

not to be discovered. Locke.

Thy throne is darkness in the abyss of light,

A blaze of glory that forbids the light;

Or teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd.

And search no further than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

2. To impart from heaven.

The sufferings of this life are not to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. Romans.

REVEAL'ER. n. f. [from reveal.]

1. Discoverer; one that shows or makes known.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, as a badge affixed unto things invisible, upon authority of the divine revealer. Brown.

The lives of the revealers may be justly set over against the revelation, to find whether they agree. Atterbury.

2. One that discovers to view.

He brought a taper; the revealer light

Expos'd both crime and criminal to sight. Dryden.

To REVEL. v. n. [Skinner derives it from reveler, French, to awake; Lye from revelen, Dutch, to rave loosely about,

which is much countenanced by the old phrase, revel-rout.] To feast with loose and clamorous merriment.

My honey love,

Will we return unto thy father's house,

And revel it as bravely as the best. Shakspere.

We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two.

Tybal being slain so late,

It may be thought we held him carelessly,

Being our kinsman, if we revel much. Shakspere.

Antony, that revels long o'night's,

Is up. Shakspere.

We shall have retelling to-night;

I will assume thy part in some disguise. Shakspere.

He can report you more odd tales

Of our outlaw Robin Hood,

That revel'd here in Sherwood,

Though he us'er shot in his bow. Ben Jonson.

Were the doctrine new,

That the earth mov'd, this day would make it true;

For every part to dance and revel goes,

They tread the air, and fall not where they rose. Donne.

REV

Where've I revel'd in the women's houses,
For first I sought her but at lecher houses:
The apples she had gather'd smell most sweet. Forster.

RE'VEL. n. f. [from the verb.] A feast with loose and noisy jollity.

Let them pinch th' unclean knight,

And ask him, why, this hour of hury revel,

In their so sacred paths he dares to tread? Shaksp.

They could do no less but, under your fair conduct,

Crave leave to view these ladies, and intreat

An hour of revels with them. Shakspere.

To RE'VEL. v. a. [revello, Latin.] To retract; to draw back.

Those, who miscarry, escape by their flood,

reveling the humours from their lungs. Harvey.

Venefaction in the left arm does more immediate reach, yet the difference is minute. Friend.

RE'VEL-ROU. n. f.

1. A mob; an unlawful assembly of a rabble. Anfworth.

2. Tumultuous festivity.

For this his munion, the revel-rout is done. Rome.

REVELA'TION. n. f. [from revelation, Fr.]

1. Discovery; communication; communication of sacred and mysterious truths

by a teacher from heaven.

When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers of them, that they numbered even the letters of the Old Testament. Deacy of Picty.

As the gospel appears in respect of the law to be a clearer revelation of the mystical part, so it is a far more benign dispensation of the practical part. Spatt.

2. The apocalypse; the prophecy of St.

John, revealing future things.

RE'VELLER. n. f. [from revel.] One who feasts with noisy jollity.

Furies black, grey, green, and white,

You moonshame revellers attend your office, Shaksp.

Unwelcome revellers, whose lawless joy

Pains the sage ear, and hurts the sober eye. Pope.

RE'VELRY. n. f. [from revel.] Loose jollity; festive mirth.

Forget this new-fall'n dignity,

And fall into our rubick revelry. Shakspere.

There let Hymen oft appear

In fustian robe with taper clear,

And pomp, and feast, and revelry,

With mask and antic pagantry. Milton.

To REVENGE. v. a. [revenge, revancher, French.]

1. To return an injury.

Not unappaid'd he paid the Stygian gate,

Who leaves a brother to revenge his fate. Pope.

2. To vindicate by punishment of an enemy.

If our hard fortune no compassion draws,

The gods are just, and will revenge our cause. Dryden.

3. To wreak one's wrongs on him that indicted them. With the reciprocal pronoun, or in a passive sense.

Came, Antony and young Octavius,

Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius. Shakspere.

It is a quarrel most unkindest,

To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee. Shaksp.

Northumberland flew thy father;

And thine, lord Clifford; and you vow'd revenge;

It be not, heavens be reveng'd on me! Shaksp.

Edom hath revenged himjif upon Judah. Eschiah.

O Lord, visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors. Jeremiah.

Who shall come to stand against thee, to be revenged for the unrighteous men? Wisdom.

Your fury of a wife,

Not yet content to be reveng'd on you,

Th' agents of your passion will pursue. Dryden.

REVENGE. n. f. [revenge, revanche, Fr.]

1. Return of an injury.

May we, with the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with further revenge. Shakespeare.

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood; from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy. Druter.

Deformed persons are commonly even with nature: for as nature has done ill by them, so they do by nature; being void of natural affection;
they have their revenge of nature. Bacon.

What will not ambition and revenge defend to?
Milton.

The fury in a rage
Forgets his business is to laugh and bite,
And will of death and dire revenges write. Dryden.
Draco, the Athenian law-giver, granted an immunity to any person that took revenge upon an adulterer. Broome.

1. The passion of vengeance; desire of hurting one from whom hurt has been received.

Revenge burn in them for their dear causes
Would, to the blessing and the grim alarm, Excite the mortified man. Shakespeare.

2. Revenge is an act of passion; vengeance of justice. Injuries are revenged, crimes are avenged. This distinction is perhaps not always preserved.

REVENGEFUL. adj. [from revenge.] Vindictive; full of revenge; full of vengeance.

May my hands
Never brandish more revengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe. Shakespeare.

If thy revengeful heart cannot be wile,
Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword,
Which hute in this true breast. Shakespeare.

Into my borders now Jerbas falls,
And my revengeful brother scales the walls. Denby.
Repenting England, thus revengeful day,
To Philip's name did an offering bring. Dryden.

REVENGEFULLY. adv. [from revengeful.] Vindictively.

He smil'd revengefully, and leap'd
Upon the floor; thence gazing in the skies,
His eye-balls fiery red, and glowing vengeance;
Gods I incite you not. Dryden.

REVENGER. n. f. [from revenge.]

1. One who revenges; one who wreaks his own or another's injuries.

May he, that better reason will assuage
The rash revenger's heat; words, well dispos'd,
Have secret pow'r to appease enkindled rage. Spenser.

I do not know,
Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son and friends. Shakespeare.

So shall the great revenger ruinate
Him and his issue, by a dreadful fate. Sandys.

Moroc's monarch
Had come in person, to have seen an unknown
The injur'd world's revenger and his own. Waller.

2. One who punishes crimes.

What government can be imagined, without judicial proceedings? and what methods of punishment, without a religious oath, which supposes an omnipotent being, as confessor to its falsehood or truth, and a revenger of perjury? Bacon.

REVENGEMENT. n. f. [from revenge.]
Vengeance; return of an injury.

It may dwell
In her son's flesh to mind revengement,
And be for all chaste dames an endless monument. Spenser.

By the perforce of the same verse, vagabond is understood for such a one as travelleth in fear of revengement. Raleigh.

REVENGINGLY. adv. [from revengeing.]

With vengeance; vindictively.

I've belid'd a lady,
The prince of this country; and the air on't Reckoningly enticeth me. Shakespeare.

REVENUE. n. f. [revenue, French.] Income; annual profits received from lands or other funds.

They privily lend over unto them the revenues
where with they are thus maintained. Spenser.
She bears a duke's revenues on her back.

And in her heart learns our poverty. Shakespeare.

Only I retain

The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, beloved souls, be yours. Shalf.

Many officers are of so small revenue, as not to furnish a man with what is sufficient for the support of his life. Temple.

If the woman could have contented with golden eggs, she might have kept that revenue on full. L'Arrange.

His vassals easy, and the owner blest;
They pay a trifle, and enjoy the rest;
Not to a nation's revenues are paid;

The servant's faults are on the master laid. Swift.
When men grow great from their revenue spent,
And fly from battlements into parliament. Young.

TO REVERBERATE. v. a. [reverbero, Latin.] To resound; to reverberate. Not in use.

Reverse thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous radiant. Shakespeare.

The youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty hearted, whose loud found Reverbs no hollows. Shakespeare.

REVERBERANT. adj. [reverberans, Latin.] Resounding; beating back. The reading in the following passage should be, I think, reverberant.

Hollow your name to the reverberate hills,
And make the babbling gossip of the air
Cry out, Oh, hie! Shakespeare.

TO REVERBERATE. v. a. [reverbero,
Latin, reverberer, Fr.]

1. To beat back.

Nor doth he know them for aught,
Till he behold them formed in the upbrause
Where they're extended; which, like an arch, Reverberates. Shakespeare.

The found again. Shakespeare.
As the light of the eye is like a glass, so is the ear a sinuous cave, with a hard bone, to stop and reverberate the sound. Bacon.

As we, to improve the nobler kinds of fruits, are at the expence of walls to receive and reverberate
the faint rays of the sun, so we, by the help of a good soil, equal the production of warmer countries. Swift.

2. To beat in an intense furnace, where the flame is reverberated upon the matter to be melted or cleaned.

Cross matters, that is steel corroded with vinegar or sulphur, and after reverberated with fire, the loadstone will not attract. Brown.

TO REVERBERATE. v. n.

1. To be driven back; to bound back.

The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Alerio, that they dispelled all clouds. Howel.

2. To resound.

And echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And ev'n at hand a drum is ready brace'd,
That shall reverberate all as well as thine. Shalf.

REVERBERATION. n. f. [reverberation,
Fr. from reverberate.] The act of beating or driving back.

To the reflection of visible, small glasses suffice;
but to the reverberation of nodules, are required greater spaces. Bacon.

The first repetitions follow very thick; for two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, like the several reverberations of the same image
from two opposite looking glasses. Adams.

REVERBERATORY. adj. [reverberatoire,
Fr.] Returning; beating back.

Good lime may be made of all kinds of flints,
but they are hard to burn, except in a reverbera-tory kiln. Mason.

TO REVERBERATE. v. a. [reverberer, Fr. reverberer, Latin.] To reverence; to honour; to venerate; to regard with awe.

An emperor often stamped on his coins the face or ornaments of his colleague, and we may suppose Lucius Verus would omit no opportunity of doing honour to Marcus Aurelius, whom he rather revered as his father, than treated as his partner in the empire. Addison.

Jove shall again reverse your pow'r,
And rise a swan, or fall a show'r. Ph.

Taught 'em how clemency made pow'r tremble,
And that the prince below'd was truly fear'd. Ph.

REVERENCE. n. f. [reverence, Fr. reveren-
entia, Lat.]

1. Veneration; respect; awful regard.

When quarrels and factions are carried openly,
A sign the reverence of government is lost. Bacon.
Higher of the genial bed,
And with mysterious reverence I decem. Milton.

In your prayers, use reverent postures and the lowest gestures of humility, remembering that we speak to God, in our reverence to whom we cannot exceed. Taylor.

A poet cannot have too great a reverence for readers. Dryden.
The fear, acceptable to God, is a filial fear, an awful reverence of the divine nature, proceeding from a just esteem of his perfections, which proceeds in us an inclination to his service, and an willingness to offend him. Rea.

2. Act of obedience; bow; courtesy.

Now he she there,
And none so poor to do him reverence. Shakespeare.
He led her easily forth,
Where Godfrey sat among his lords and peers,
She reverence did, then blis'd us one day. Farley.

Had not men the heavy heads rever'd,
Or boys paid reverence when a man appear'd,
Both must have dy'd. Dryden.

Up starts the bel-dam,
And reverence made, accented thus the queen. Dryden.

The monarch
Commands into the court the beauteous Emily
So call'd, the came; the feat rose and paid Becoming reverence to the royal maid. Dryden.

3. Title of the clergy.

Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to. Shakespeare.

4. Poetical title of a father.

O my dear father! let this kiss
Repair those violent humors, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made. Shakespeare.

TO REVERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To regard with reverence; to regard with awful respect.

Those that I reverence, those I fear, the wise,
At fools I laugh, not fear them. Shakespeare.

While they possess pure nature's healthfulness
To louthsome sickness, worthy since they God's image did not reverence in themselves. Mt.

He flew Action, but despoil'd him not;
Nor in his hate the funeral rites forgot;
Arm'd as he was, he sent him whole below,
And reverence'd thus the man's of his foe. Dryden.

As his goodness will forbid us to dread him as slaves, so his majesty will command us to reverence him as sons. Bacon.

He presents every one so often before God in prayers, that he never thinks he can offend in reverence, or serve those enough, for whom he imports
so many merits from God. Locke.

REVERENCER. n. f. [from reverence.]
One who regards with reverence.

The Athenians, quite sunk in their affairs, had little commerce with the rest of Greece, and so became great reverencers of crowned heads. Swift.

REVEREND. adj. [reverend, Fr. reverendus,
Latin.]

1. Venerable; deserving reverence; exacting respect by his appearance.

Let his lack of years be no impediment, to let him lack a reverend estimation. Shakespeare.
Reverend and gracious senators.

Onias, who had been high priest, received a conversation, and gentle in condition, prayed to the Jews. Maccabees.

A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
An awful, reverend and religious man,
His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,
And charity itself was in his face. Dryden.

A reverend he among them came,
Who preach'd conversion and repentance. Milton.

Reverend and man: As here denoted the sanctity.

Page.

2. The honorary epithet of the clergy. Wells a clergyman, reverend; a bishop, right reverend; and archbishop, most reverend.

REVERENT. adj. [reverens, Latin.] Humble; expressing submission; testifying veneration.

They forthwith to the place
Repairing where he judg'd them, prostrate fell Before him reverent. Milton.
Meet then the sinner, far renown'd for sense,
With reverent awe, but decent confidence. Pope.

RIVERENTIAL. adj. [reverentia, Fr.] Expressing reverence; proceeding from awe and veneration.

That on the made in reverential fear
On love and his wrath may any forswear. Donne.
The least degree of contempt weakens religion;
it properly consisting in a reverential esteem of things sacred. South.
The reason of the institution being forgot, the after-ages perverted it, supposing only a reverential gratitude paid to the earth as the common parent. Woodward.

All look up, with reverential awe,
At crimes that 'scape, or triumph o'er the law. Pope.

REVERENTIALLY. adv. [from reverent.] With show of reverence.

The Jews, reverentially declining the situation of their temple, place their beds from north to south. Brown.

REVERENTLY. adv. [from reverent.] Respectfully; with awe; with reverence.
Glide him for faults, and do it reverently. Shakespeare.

His disciples here,
By their great master lent to preach him every where,
Most reverently receiv'd. Dryden.
To nether ports their shatter'd ships repair,
Whereby our dreadful cannon they lay aw'd;
So reverently men quit th' open air,
When thunder speaks the angry gods abroad. Dryden.

Then down with all thy boasted volumes, down;
Only reserve the sacred one:
Low, reverently low,
Make thy stubborn knowledge bow:
To look to heav'n be blind to all below. Prior.

REVERER. n. s. [from revere.] One who venerates; one who reveres.

When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers
of them, that it was the business of the Malorites, to number not only the sections and lines, but even the words and letters of the Old Testament.

Government of the Tongue.

REVERSAL. n. s. [from reverser.] Change of sentence.

The king, in the reversal of the attainders of his partakers, had his will. Bacon.

TO REVERSE. v. a. [reversus, Latin.]

1. To turn upside down.
A pyramid reversed may stand upon his point, if balanced by admirable skill. Temple.

2. To overturn; to subvert.
These now controul a wretched people's fate,
These can divide, and these reverse the state. Pope.

3. To turn back.
Michael's sword stay'd not;
But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering shun'd

4. To contradict; to repeal.

Reader it was in the eye of his understanding, that sometimes an erroneous sentence definitive should prevail, till the same authority, perceiving such oversight, might afterwards correct or reverse it, than that stricts should have respite to grow, and not come speedily upon some end. Hooker.
A decree was made, that they had forfeited their liberties; and albeit they made great moans, yet could they not procure this sentence to be reversed.

Hayward.

Death, his doom which I
To mitigate thus plead, not to reverse,
To better life shall yield him. Milton.

Though grace may have reversed the condemning sentence, and sealed the sinner's pardon before God, yet it may have left no transcript of that pardon in the sinner's breast. South.

Those seem to do best, who, taking useful hints from facts carry them in their minds to be judged of, by what they shall find in history to confirm or reverse these imperfect observations. Locke.

5. To turn to the contrary.

These plain characters we rarely find,
Though strong the bent, yet quick the turns of mind; Pope.

Of puzzling contraries confound the whole,
Or a 'betwixt quite a reverse the soul. Pope.

6. To put each in the place of the other.

With what tyranny custom governs men! it makes that reputable in one age, which was a vice in another, and reverses even the distinctions of good and evil. Rogers.

7. To recall; to renew. Obsolete.

Well knowing true all he did rehearse;
And to his fresh remembrance did reverse
The ugly view of his deformed crimes. Spenser.

TO REVERSE. v. n. [revertere, reversus, Latin.] To return.

REVERSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Change; vicissitude.
The strange reverse of fate you see;
I pity'd you, now you may pity me. Dryden.

By a strange reverse of things, Justinian's law, which for many ages was neglected, does now obtain, and the Theodosian code is in a manner anti-quoted. Baker.

2. A contrary; an opposite. This is a sense rather colloquial than analogous.
Count Tariff appeared the reverse of Goodman

Faith. Addison.

The performances, to which God has annexed the promises of eternity, are just the reverse of all the pursuits of sense. Rogers.

3. [revers, Fr.] The side of the coin on which the head is not impressed.

As the Romans set down the image and inscription of the consul, afterward of the emperor on the one side, so they changed the reverse always upon new events. Camden.

Our guard upon the royal side;
On the reverse of our beauty's pride
Several reverses are owed to be the representations of antique figures. Addison.

REVERSIBLE. adj. [reversibile, Fr. from reverser.] Capable of being reversed.

REVERSION. n. s. [reversion, Fr. from reverser.]

the death of the present possessor.

As were our England in reversion his,
And he our subjects next degree in hope. Shakspeare.

A life in reversion is not half so valuable, as that which may at present be entered on. Hammond.

2. Succession; right of succession.
He was very old, and had out-lived most of his friends; many persons of quality being dead, who had, for recompense of services, procured the reversion of his office. Clarendon.

Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a satiety; whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute? South.

So many candidates there stand for wit,
A place at court is scarce so hard to get;
In vain they crowd each other at the door;
For o'er reversions are all begg'd before. Dryden.

Fame's a reversion in which men take place,
O late reversion at their own decease. Young.

REVERSIONARY. adj. [from reversion.]

To be enjoyed in succession.

There are multitudes of reversionary persons, and reversionary promises of preferment.

TO REVERT. v. a. [revertio, Latin.]

1. To change; to turn to the contrary.

Till happy chance revert the cruel scene;
And apishly, with her wild resort
Of wit and jest, disturbs the solemn court. Prior.

2. To reverberate.

The stream boils
Around the stone, or from the hollow'd bank
Reverted plays in undulating flow. Thompson.

TO REVERT. v. n. [revertir, old French.]

To return; to fall back.

My arrows,
Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind,
Would have reverted to my bow again. Shakspeare.

It is tenant and patentee shall dispose of his gift without his kingly assent, the lands shall revert to the king. Doorn.

REVERT. n. s. [from the verb.] Return; recurrence. A musical term.

Hath not music her figures the same with rhetorick? what is a revert but her anastrophe? Pedechon.

REVERTIBLE. adj. [from revert.] Returnable.

REVERY. n. s. [reversie, French.] Loosening; irregular thought.

Revery is when ideas float in our mind, without any reflection or regard of the understanding. Locke.

If the minds of men were laid open, we should see but little difference between that of the wise man and that of the fool; there are infinite reverses and numberless extravagancies pass through both.
Addison.

I am really so far gone, as to take pleasure in reverses of this kind. Pope.

TO REVERT. v. a. [reversir, reversir, Fr.
reversio, Lat.]

1. To clothe again.

Her, methinks,
Th' enchanter finding fit for his intents,
Did thus revert, and deck with due habiliments. Spenser.

When then of life renewest the seeds,
The withered fields revert their cheerful woods. Wotton.

2. To reinvest; to vest again in a possession or office.

REVERTUARY. n. s. [reversaire, French;
from reversio, Latin.] Place where dresses are deposited.

The effectual power of words the Pythagoreans extolled; the impious Jews ascribed all miracles to a name, which was engraven in the revertuary of the temple. Camden.

REVERTION. n. s. [revertum, Latin.]

Return to life.

If the Rabbin's prophecy succeed, we shall conclude the days of the plagues, not in its own, but in the last and general flames, without all hope of reversion. Brown.

TO REVERTUAL. v. a. [re and virtual.]

To stock with virtuels again.

It hath been objected, that I put into Ireland, and spent much time there, taking care to revertual
myself, and none of the rest. Raleigh.

So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye
Has lost the chaffers, and has eat the cry. Denham.

2. To see again.

I shall review Sicily; for whole fight
I have a woman's longing. Shakspeare.

3. To consider over again; to re-examine.
Segnis says, that the Ancis is an imperfect work, and that death prevented the divine part from reviewing it; and, for that reason he had condemned it to the fire. Dryden.

4. To retrace.

REVUE. n. f. [from revire, French; from the verb.] Survey; re-examination.

He with great indifference considered his reviews and subsequent editions.

We make a general review of the whole work, and a general review of nature; that, by comparing them, their full correspondence may appear.

The works of nature will bear a thousand views and reviews; the more narrowly we look into them, the more occasion we shall have to admire.

TO REVILE. v. a. [re and vile.] To reproach; to vilify; to treat with contumely.

Asked for their pass by every squib, That list at will them to revile or sub.

Matter against us; and his eye revild Me as his subject object.

Comes thund'ring back with dreadful revolution
On my defenceless head. Milton.

To REVOMIT. v. a. [revomir, French; re and vomit.] To vomit; to vomit again.

They might cast it up, and take more, vomiting and revomiting what they drink. Hakeuill.

REVULSION. n. f. [revulsion, Fr. revulsus, Lat.] The act of revelling or drawing humours from a remote part of the body.

Drivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote or contrary part, we call it revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it drivation. Wyseman.

There is a way of revulsion to let blood in an adverse part. Bacon.

I had heard of some strange cures of frenzies, by casual applications of fire to the lower parts, which seems reasonable enough, by the violent revulsion
it may make of humours from the head. Temple.

REVULSIVE. adj. Having the power of revulsion.

His flux of blood breaking forth again with greater violence than it had done before, was not to be stopped by outward applications, nor the revulsives of any kind. Fell.

To REWARD. v. a. [re and award, to give in return. Skinner.]

Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil. 1 Samucl.

They rewarded me evil for good. Ejuba.

2. To repay; to recompense for something good.

God rewards those that have made use of the single talent, that lowest proportion of grace, which he is pleased to give; and the method of his rewarding is by giving them more grace. Hammond.

To judge the unfaithful dead, but to reward

His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton.

There is no more reason to reward a man for believing that four is more than three, than for being hungry or sleepy; because these things do not proceed from choice, but from natural necessity. A man must do so, nor can he do otherwise. Willis.

The Supreme Being rewards the just, and punishes the unjust. Brown.

REWARD. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Recompense given for good performed.

Rewards and punishments do always presuppose some thing willingly done well or ill, without which respect, though we may sometimes receive good, yet then it is only a benefit, and not a reward. Hooker.

To myself I owe this due regard,

Not to make love my gift, but my reward. Dryden.

Men have consented to the immortality of the soul and the recompenses of another world, promising to themselves some rewards of virtue after this life. Tillotson.

2. It is sometimes used with a mixture of irony, for punishment or recompense of evil.

REWARDABLE. adj. [from reward.] Worthy of reward.

Men's actions are judged, whether in their own nature rewardable or punishable. Hooker.

The action that is but indifferent, and without reward, if done only upon our own choice, is an act of religion, and rewardable by God, if done in obedience to our superiors. Taylor.

REWARDER. n. f. [from reward.] One that rewards; one that recompenses.

A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakspere.
As the Supreme Being is the only proper judge of our perfections, so is he the only fit rewarder of them. Addison.

All judges, as well as rewarders, have popular assemblies been, of those who best deserved from them. Swift.

To REWORD. v. a. [re and word.] To repeat in the same words.

Bring me to the test,
And I the matter will reward; which madness
Would gambol from. Shakspere.

RHABARBARATE. adj. [from rhabarbara, Latin.] Impregnated or tinctured with rhubarb.

The salt humours must be evacuated by the co-mate, rhabarbarate, and sweet manna purgers, with acids added, or the purging waters. Floyer.

RHABDOMANCY. n. f. [ῥαβδος and μαντρία.] Divination by a wand.

Of peculiar rhabdomancy is that which is used in mineral discoveries, with a forked hazel, commonly called Moses's rod, which, freely held forth, will stir and play if any mine be under it. Brown.

RHAPSODIST. n. f. [from rhapsody.] One who writes without regular dependence of one part upon another.

Ask our rhapsodist, if you have nothing but the excellence and loveliness of virtue to preach, and no future rewards or punishments, how many vicious wretches will you ever reclaim? Watts.

RHAPSODY. n. f. [ῥαψωδία; ῥάψω, to sew, and ὠδή, a song.] Any number of parts joined together, without necessary dependence or natural connection.

Such a deed, as sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words. Shakspere.

This confusion and rhapsody of diction was not to be supposed in each single stanza. Hammond.
He, that makes no reflection on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales fit for the entertainment of others. Locke.

The words slide over the ears, and vanish like a rhapsody of evening tales. Watts.

RHEIN-BERRY. n. f. [pina cervina, Lat.]
Buckthorn, a plant.

RHETORICK. n. f. [ῥητορικὴ; rhetorique,
French.]

1. The art of speaking not merely with propriety, but with art and elegance.

We could not allow him an orator, who had the best thoughts, and who knew all the rules of rhe-torique, if he had not acquired the art of using them.
Dryden.

Of the passions, and how they are moved, Asit-tote, in his second book at rhetorick, hath admirably discriminated in a little compass. Locke.

Grammar teaches us to speak properly, rhe-torick instructs to speak elegantly. Baker.

2. The power of persuasion; oratory.

The heart's toll rhetorick, dislodged with sighs.
Shakspere.

His lab'ring lips then did so faintly part,
Whence of pure rhetorick whole Aeneas outflow'd. Fulgent.

Enjoy your dear wit and pay rhetorick,
That hath to well been taught her dialling frame. Milton.

RHETORICAL. adj. [rhetoricus, Latin;
from rhetorick.] Pertaining to rhetoric;
oratorical; figurative.

The apprehension is so deeply riveted into my mind, that rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen it. Marc.

Because Brutus and Cassius met a blackmore, and Pompey had on a duck garment at Pharsalia, these were pretexts of their overthrow, which notwithstanding are scarce rhetorical sequels; concluding metaphors from realities, and from conceptions metaphorical inferring realities again. Brown.

The subject may be moral, logical, or rhetorical,
which does not come under our senses. Watts.

RHETORICALLY. adv. [from rhetorical.] Like an orator; figuratively; with intent to move the passions.

To RHETORICATE. v. n. [rhetoricor, low Latin; from rhetorick.] To play the orator; to attack the passions.

'I will be much more sensible to reform, than apologize or rhetorate; not to flatter themselves to perish in the midst of such solicitations to be saved. Decay of Piety.

RHETORICIAN. n. f. [rhetoricien, French;
rhetor, Latin.]

1. One who teaches the science of rhe-torick.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians, which ever had young auditors, lived till they were an hundred years old. Bacon.

'Tis the business of rhetoricians to treat the characters of the passions. Dryden.

A man may be a very good rhetorician, and yet
at the same time a mean orator. Baker.

2. An orator. Let's proper.

He play'd at Lions a declaiming prize.
At which the vanquish'd rhetorician dies. Dryden.

RHETORICIAN. adj. Suited a master of rhetorick.

Boldly presum'd with rhetorician pride,
To hold of any question either side. Blackmore.

RHEUM. n. f. [ῥευμα; rheume, French.]

A thin watery matter oozing through the glands, chiefly about the mouth. Quincy.

Trust not these cunning waters of his eyes;

For villainy is not without such a rheum;

And he, long treaded just, makes it seem

Like rivers of venoms. Shakspere.

You did void your rheum upon my beard. Shaksp.

Each changing itaken does its poison bring.

Rheum chill the water, agues bind the spring.

RHEUMATICK. adj. [ῥευματικὸς; from rheum.] Proceeding from rheum or a peccant watery humour.

The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatick diseases do abound. Shakespeare
The blood taken away looked very fizy or rheumatick. Flower

RHEUMATISM. n. s. [ῥευματισμός; rheumatisme, French; rheumatismus, Latin.] A painful distemper supposed to proceed from acrid humours.

Rheumatism is a distemper affecting chiefly the membranous communis mufculorum, which it makes rigid and unfit for motion; and it seems to be occasioned almost by the same causes, as the mucilaginous glands in the joints are rendered stiff and gritty in the gout. Quincy

The throating quinsy, 'tis my star appoints,
And rheumatism I lend to rack the joints. Dryden
RHEUMY. adj. [from rheum.] Full of sharp moisture.

Is Brutus sick?
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night?
And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,
To add unto his sickness? Shakespeare

The south he loath'd, who night and horror brings,
And fogs are thicken from his flaggy wings;
From his divided beard two streams he pours;
His head and rheumy eyes distil in thaws. Dryden

RHINOCEERUS. n. s. [ῥίς and κίρας; rhinoceros, French.] A vast beast in the East Indies armed with a horn on his nose.

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble. Shakespeare

If you draw your beast in an emblem, show a landscape of the country natural to the beast, as to the rhinoceros an East India landscape, the crocodile, an Egyptian. Peacham

RHOMB. n. s. [rhombe, French; rhombus, Latin; ῥόμβος.] In geometry, a parallel logarithm or quadrangular figure, having its four sides equal, and consisting of parallel lines, with two opposite angles acute, and two obtuse; it is formed by two equal and right cones joined together at their base. Trevoux and Harris

Save the sun his labour, and that swift Nocturnal and diurnal rhomb suppos'd
Invisible else above all stars, the wheel
Of day and night. Milton

See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs and wedges, and half moons and wings Milton

RHOMBICK. adj. [from rhomb.] Shaped like a rhomb.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; and they are of a rhombick figure; talk, of such as are rhomboid. Grew

RHOMBOID. n. s. [ῥομβοειδής; rhomboides, French.] A figure approaching to a rhomb.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; and they are of a rhomboid figure; talk, of such as are rhomboid. Grew

RHOMBOIDAL. adj. [from rhomboid.] Approaching in shape to a rhomb.

Another rhomboidal telescope of a compressed form, had many others mixed round the middle of it. Woodward

RHUBARB. n. s. [ῥαβάρβα, Latin.] A medicinal root slightly purgative, referred by botanists to the dock.

What rhubarb, tenna, or what purgative drug Would scour these English hence? Shakespeare Having fixed the tontanel, I purged him with an infusion of rhubarb in small ale. Wife

RHYME. n. s. [ῥυθμός; rhythme, Fr.]

1. A harmonical succession of sounds.

The youth with songs and rhymes:
Some dance, some hale the rope. Dante

2. The consonance of verses; the correspondence of the last sound of one verse to the last sound or syllable of another.

For rhyme the rudder is of verses,
With which like ships they steer their courses. Hudibras

Such was the news, indeed, but songs and rhymes
Prevail as much in these hard iron times;
As would a plump of trembling fowl, that rise
Against an eagle frowning from the skies. Dryden

It Cupid throws a single dart,
We make him wound the lover's heart;
But if he takes his bow and quiver,
'Tis fate he must transfix the liver;
For rhyme with reason may dispense,
And sound has right to govern sense. Prior

3. Poetry; a poem.

All his manly power it did disperse,
As he were warn'd, with enchaunted rhymes,
That oftentimes he quak'd. Fairy Queen
Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme. Milton
Now sportive youth,
Carol incoadite rhythms with fanning notes,
And quaver inharmonious. Philips

4. A word of sound to answer to another word.

What wife means to gain it half thou chose?
Know, time and fortune both are made of prose.
Is thy ambition sweating for a rhyme,
Thou unambitious fool, at this late time? Young

RHYME or reason. Number or sense.

I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme;
But from that time unto this season,
I had neither rhyme nor reason. Spenser

The guiltiness of my mind drove the grovellers of the toppers into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fanciers. Shakespeare

TO RHYME. &c.

1. To agree in sound.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But fagotted his notions as they tell,
And, if they rhim'd and rattled, all was well. Dry

2. To make verses.

These fellows of insinuating tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies favours, they do always reason themselves out again. Shakespeare
There march'd the bard and blockhead, side by side,
Who rhym'd for hire, and patroniz'd for pride. Pope

RHYMER. n. s. [from rhyme.] One who makes rhymes; a versifier; a poet in contempt.

Scall'd rhymers will ballad up and o' time. Shakespeare
It was made penit to the English, to permit the Tish to graze upon their lands, to entertain any of their minstrels, rhymers, or news-tellers. Davies

Rhymer come on, and do the worst you can;
I fear not you, nor yet a better man. Dryden

Milton's rhyme is confirmed at an age, when the passion of love makes every man a rhymers, though not a poet. Dryden

I speak of those who are only rhymers. Deamus

RHYTHMICAL. adj. [ῥυθμικός; rhythmique, French; from rhyme or rhythm.] Harmonical; having one sound proportioned to another.

RIB. n. s. [iubbe, Saxon.]

1. A bone in the body.

Of these there are twenty-four in number, viz.
twelve on each side the twelve vertebrae of the back,
they are segments of a circle; they grow flat and broad, as they approach the sternum; but the nearer they are to the vertebrae, the rounder and thicker they are; at which end they have a round head, which, being covered with a cartilage, is received into the sinus in the bodies of the vertebrae: the ribs, thus articulated, make an acute angle with the lower vertebrae: the ribs have each a small canal or sinus, which runs along their under sides, in which lies a nerve, vein, and artery: the extremities which are fastened to the sternum, are cartilaginous, and the cartilages make an obtuse angle with the bony part of the ribs; this angle respects the heart: the cartilages are harder in women than in men: that they may better bear the weight of their breasts: the ribs are of two sorts; the seven upper are called true ribs, because their cartilaginous ends are received into the sinus of the sternum: the five lower are called false ribs, because they are softer and shorter, of which only the first is joined to the extremity of the sternum the cartilaginous extremities of the rest being tied to one another, and thereby leaving a greater space for the dilatation of the stomach and intestines: the last of these short ribs is shorter than all the rest, it is not tied to them, but sometimes to the muscular oblique descendens. Quincy

Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature? Shakespeare

He open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib, with cordial spirits warm
And life blood streaming fresh. Milton
Sure he, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide,
And ribs of iron arm'd his side. Dryden

2. Any piece of timber or other matter which strengthens the side.

I should not see the sandy hour glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in land,
Vailing his high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Shakespeare

The ships with shatter'd ribs scarce creep from the lens. Dryden

3. Any prominence running in lines: as the stalks of a leaf.

RIBALD. n. s. [ribault, French; ribaldi, Italian.] A loose, rough, mean, brutal wretch.

That lewd ribald, with vile lust advanced,
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To spoil her dainty corse to fair and chaste. Spenser

Your ribald nag of Egypt,
The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoits sails, and flies. Shakespeare

The busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, has rous'd the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer. Shakespeare

Ne'er one spring of laurel grac'd these ribalds,
From flaring Bentley down to pining ribalds. Long

RIBALDRY. n. s. [from ribald; ribaldus, old French.] Mean, lewd, brutal language.

Mr. Cowley asserts, that obscenity has no place in wit; Buckingham says, 'tis an ill sort of wit, which has nothing more to support it than base faced ribaldry. Dryden

The ribaldry of the low characters is directed;
the reeve, miller, and cook are distinguished from each other. Dryden

In the same antique loom these scenes were wrought,
Embellish'd with good morals and just thought,
True nature in her noblest light you see,
Ere yet debauch'd by modern gallantry
To trifling jests and insinuating ribaldry. Granville

It the outward profession of religion were once a practice among men in office, the clergy would see their duty and interest in qualifying themselves for lay-conversation, when once they were out of fear of being chok'd by ribaldry or prophaneities. Deft

RIBAND. n. s. [rubande, ruban, French.]
This word is sometimes written ribon.

A fillet of silk; a narrow web of silk,
which is worn for ornament.

Quant in green, the shall be loose enrub'd,
With ribbands pendent, tarmg 'bout her head. Shakespeare

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose. Dryden

See! in the lists they wait the trumpet's sound;
Some love device is wrought on ev'ry sword,
And ev'ry riband bears some mystic word. Giles

RIBBED, adj. [from rib.]
1. Furnished with ribs.

Was I by rocks engender'd; rib'd with steel?
Such tortures to resist, or not to feel? Sandys.
Hung on each bough a single leaf appears,
Which thrivell'd in its infancy remains,
Like a clo'd fan, not stretch'd wide its veins,
But as the seasons in their circle run,
Opens its rib'd surface to the nearer sun. Gay.

2. Enclosed as the body by ribs.

Remember
The natural bravery of your ile, which stands
As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
With rocks calcable, and roaring waters. Shak.

3. Marked with protuberant lines.

RIBBON, n. f. See RIBBAND.

TO RIBBROAST, v. n. [rib and roast.] To beat soundly. A burlesque word.

That done, he rises, humbly bows,
And gives thanks for the princely blows;
Deprets not mealy proud, and boasting
Of his magnificent ribbroasting. Buther.
I have been pinched in flesh, and well ribbroasted under my former masters; but I'm in now for skin and all. L'Estrange.

RIBWORT, n. f. [plantago.] A plant.

RIC, denotes a powerful, rich, or valiant man: as in these verses of Fortunatus:

Hilperice potens, si interpres barbarus
adjt.

Adjutor furtis hoc quoque nomen habet.
Hilperic barbarians a stout helper term.
So Afric is altogether strong; Ethelric, nobly strong or powerful: to the same sense as Polyrates, Crato, Plutarchus, Opimus. Gibson's Camden.

RICE, n. f. [oryza, Lat.] One of the esculent grains: it hath its grains disposed into a pumle, which are almost of an oval figure, and are covered with a thick husk, somewhat like barley: this grain is cultivated in most of the eastern countries. Miller.

Rice is the food of two thirds of mankind: it is kindly to human constitution, proper for the consumptive, and those subject to hemorrhages.

Abuthnot.
If the snuff get out of the snuffers, it may fall into a dish of rice milk. Sayt.

RICH, adj. [riche, Fr. ricco, Ital. rica, Saxon.]

1. Wealthy; abounding in wealth; abounding in money or possessions; opulent;
opposed to poor.

How as rich in having such a jewel,
As twenty seas, if all the sand were pearl. Shak.
The rich shall not give more, and the poor no less. Isidus.

A thief bent to unboard the cash
Of some rich lurcher. Milton.

Rich was his soul, though his attire was poor,
As heav'n had cloth'd his own ambassador. Dryd.

Several nations of the Americans are rich in land, and poor in all the comforts of life. Locke.

He only look upon the rich as benefactors, who have beautified the prospect all around him. Sed.

2. Valuable; estimable; precious; splen-

d; sumptuous.
Earth, in her rich attire,
Constitute lovely soil'd. Milton.

Mistress never was meanly dress'd in her life;
and nothing pleases her in dress, but that which is very rich and beautiful to the eye. Law.

3. Having any ingredients or qualities in a great quantity or degree.
So we th' Arabian could do know
At distance, when the spices blow,
By the rich odour taught to flee,
Though neither day nor star appear.
If life be short, it shall be glorious,
Each minute shall be rich in some great action. Rowe.

Sauces and rich spices are fetched from India.
Baker.

4. Fertile; fruitful.

There are, who fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold on their ill-natur'd land Induce. Philips.

5. Abundant; plentiful.

The gorgeous East with richest hand
Pours on her sons barbaric pearl and gold. Milt.

6. Abounding; plentifully stocked: as, pastures rich in flocks.

7. Having something precious.
Groves whose rich trees wept odoriferous gums and balm. Milton.

RICHED, adj. [from rich.] Enriched.
Obsolete.

Of all these bounds,
With shadowy forests, and with champions rich'd,
With plenteous rivers and wide skated meads,
We make thee lady. Shakespeare.

RICHES, n. f. [richesses, French.]

1. Wealth; money or possessions.

The infirmity of riches to charity has rendered it necessary by laws to secure property.
Hammond.

Chemists seek riches by transmutation and the great elixir. Spatt.
Riches do not consist in having more gold and silver, but in having more in proportion than our neighbours, whereby we are enabled to procure to ourselves a greater plenty of the conveniences of life, than comes within their reach, who, sharing the gold and silver of the world in a less proportion, want the means of plenty and power, and in are poorer. Locke.

What riches give us, let us first enquire,
Meat, fire, and cloaths, what more? meat, cloaths, and fire. Pope.

2. Splendid sumptuous appearance.

The riches of heav'n's pavement, trodden gold.
Milton.

RICHLY, adv. [from rich.]

1. With riches; wealthily; splendidly; magnificently.

In Belmont is a lady richly left,
And she is fair, of wondrous virtues. Shakespeare.
Women richly gay in gear? Milton.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.
In animals, some faculties are found more richly than in plants. Brown.

After a man has studied the laws of England, the reading the reports of adjudged cases will richly improve him. Harris.

3. Truly; abundantly. An ironical use.
There is such licentiousness among the best of the people, that one would not be sorry to see them following upon one another a chattering, which they to richly deserve. Addison.

RICHNESS, n. f. [from rich.]

1. Opulence; wealth.

Of virtue you have left proof to the world,
And virtue is grateful with beauty and richness adorn'd. Sedgwick.

2. Finery; splendour.

3. Fertility; fecundity; fruitfulness.

This town is famous for the richness of the soil.
Addison.

4. Abundance or perfection of any quality.
I amused myself with the richness and variety of colours in the western part of heaven. Spectator.

5. Pampering qualities.

The lively tincture of whose gushing blood
Should clearly prove the richness of his food. Dryden.

RICK, n. f. See RICKS.

1. A pile of corn or hay regularly heaped up in the open field, and sheltered from wet.

An inundation
O'erflow'd a farmer's barn and stable;
Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn
Were down the sudden current born. Swift.
Mice and rats do great injuries in the field,
houses, barns, and corn ricks. Martimer.

2. A heap of corn or hay piled by the gatherer.

In the north they bind them up in small bundles and make small ricks of them in the field. Martimer.

RICKETS, n. f. [rachitis, Latin. A name given to the distemper at its first appearance by Gibson.] A distemper in children, from an unequal distribution of nourishment, whereby the joints grow knotty, and the limbs uneven: its cure is performed by evacuation and friction.

Quincy.
In some years, liver-grown, spleen, and rickets are put altogether, by reason of their likeness.

O were my pupil fairly knock'd on th' head,
I should possess th' estate, if he were dead;
He's too far gone with the rickets and th' evil,
That one small dose will tend him to the devil. Dryden.

So when at school we first de him,
Old lathy winks us in a theme,
Whole props support our infant vein,
And help the rickets in the frame,
But when our tools their force elude,
Our thoughts grow up to wit's estate. Prior.

RICKERY, adj. [from rickets.] Diseased with the rickets.

In a young animal, when the solids are too lax, the cure of rickety children, the diet should be gently stringent. Arbutnot.

RICTURE, n. f. [rictura, Lat.] A gaping.
Diet.

RID, The preterit of ride.

TO RID, v. a. [from hæbban, Saxon. In the pret. perhaps ridden or rid; in the passive participle rid.]

1. To let free; to redeem.

It is he that delivereth me from my cruel enemies; thou that rid me from the wicked man. Psalms.

Rid me, and deliver me out of great waters.

I will bring you out from under their burthens, and rid you out of their bondage. Isaiah.

2. To clear; to disencumber.

They were not before so willing to be rid of their learned patron, as now importunate to obtain him again from them, who had given him entertainment. Hooker.

I must rid all the fess of pinches. Shakespeare.
We'll rid his countenance, which being done,
Let her, who would be rid of him, devise
His speedy taking out. Shakespeare.

Upon the wind, fleet forth
Three of thy crew, to rid thee of that care.

I can put on Thy terrors, as I put thy madness on,
Lounge of thee in all things, and shall soon,
Arm'd with thy might, rid heav'n of these rebell'd.
Milton.

Did faints for this bring in their plate;
For when they thought the cause had need on't,
Happy was he that could be rid on't. Hudibras.

The god unity till he be put again,
Relov'd at once to rid himself of pain. Dryden.

The greater visible good does not always ratio men's desire, in proportion to the greatness it appears to have, though every little trouble moves us, and it is on work to get rid of it. Locke.

The ladies asked whether we believed that the men of any town would, at the same conjuncture, have loaded it selves with their wives, or rather, whether they would not have been glad of such an opportunity to get rid of them? Addison.

3. To dispatch.

Having the best at Barnet field,
We'll rather fling it, for willingness rid us away. Shakespeare.

4. To drive away; to remove by violence;
to destroy.

An executioner! you have rid this sweet young prince. Shakespeare.

RIDDANCE, n. f. [from rid.]

1. Deliverance.

Deliverance from sudden death, riddance from evil adversity, and the extent of saving mercy towards all men. Hooker.

2. Disencumbrance; less of something one is glad to lose.

I have too griev'd a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus lovers part.
—A gentle riddance. Shakespeare.
By this, the cock had a good riddance of his rival. L'Estrange.

3. Act of clearing away any encumbrances.

Those blossoms, and those dropping gums,
That lie besrown, unsightly and unsmooth,
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease. Milton.

RIDDEN. The participle of ride.

He could never have ridden out an eternal period, but it must be by a more powerful being than himself. Hale.

RIDDLE. n. f. [ræbēl], Saxon; from ræbe, counsel, perhaps a trial of wit.]

1. An enigma; a puzzling question; a dark problem.

How did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth,
In riddles and in charms of death? Shakespeare.
The Theban monster, that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out and solv'd, for grief and spite Calt herself headlong from the Ilmenian steep. Milton.

2. Any thing puzzling.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady;
Not love, if any lov'd her: hey day!
So towards never use their might,
But against such us will not fight. Hudibras.

3. [hribble, Saxon.] A coarse or open sieve.

Horse-beans and tares, sown together, are easily parted with a riddle. Mortimer.

To RIDDLE. v. a. [from the noun.]1. To solve; to unriddle. There is something of whimsical analogy between the two senses of the word riddle; as, we say, to lift a question: but their derivations differ.

Riddle me this, and guess him if you can,
Who bears a nation in a single man? Dryden.

2. To separate by a coarse sieve.

The finest sifted mould must be riddled in. Mortimer.

To RIDDLE. v. n. To speak ambiguously or obscurely.

Be plain, good son, and homely in thy dith;
Riddling confession bids but riddling truth. Shakspeare.

RIDDLINGLY. adv. [from riddle.] In the manner of a riddle; secretly.

Though like the pestilence and old-fashion'd love, Riddlingly it catch men, and doth remove Never, till it be starv'd out, yet their state Is poor. Donne.

To RIDE. v. n. pret. rid or rode; part. rid or ridden. [ridan, Saxon; rijden, Dutch.]

1. To travel on horseback.

Brutus and Cassius
Are rid, like madmen, through the gates of Rome.
Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty. Shakespeare.
Am not I thine as, upon which thou hast ridden? Nambers.

Through storms of smoke and adverse fire he rides,
While every shot is levell'd at his sides. Smith.
Let your master ride on before, and do you gallop after him. Swift.

2. To travel in a vehicle; to be born, not to walk.

Infected be the air whereon they ride. Shakspeare.
Upon this chaos rid the distressed ark, that bore the small remains of mankind. Burnet.

3. To be supported in motion.

As venerable Moses, back'd is driv,
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears
To his experienc'd tongue. Shakespeare.

4. To manage a horse.

Skill to ride seems a science,
Proper to gentle blood; some other feign,
To manage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain. Spenser.

The horses I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. Shakespeare.
Inspir'd by love, whose business is to please,
He rode, he fenc'd, he mov'd with graceful ease. Dryden.

5. To be on the water.

On the western coast
Rideth a puissant army. Shakespeare.

R I G

RIGID. adj. [rigide, Fr. rigidus, Lat.]
1. Stiff; not to be bent; unpliant.

A body, that is hollow, may be demonstrated to be more rigid and inflexible, than a solid one of the same substance and weight. Ray.

2. Severe; inflexible.

His severe judgment giving law,
His modest fancy kept in awe;
As rigid husbands jealous are,
When they believe their wives too fair. Denham.

3. Unremitted; unmitigated.

Queen of this universe! do not believe
These rigid threats of death; ye shall not die. Milt.

4. Sharp; cruel. It is used somewhat harshly by Philips.

And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confesses
What the Silenus vigour unwithstood
Could do in rigid fight. Philips

RIGIDITY. n. f. [rigidité, Fr. from rigid.]
1. Stiffness.

Rigidity is said of the solids of the body, when, being kept or impliable, they cannot readily perform their respective offices; but a fibre is said to be rigid, when its parts do strongly cohere together, as not to yield to that action of the fluids, which ought to overcome their resistance, in order to the pervasion of health; it is to be remedied by tonics.

Rigidity of the organs is such a state as makes them resist that expansion, which is necessary to carry on the vital functions; rigidity of the vessels and organs must necessarily follow from this rigidity of the fibres. Arbuthnot.

2. Stiffness of appearance; want of easy or airy elegance.

This severe observation of nature, by the one in her commonness, and by the other in her absolute forms, must needs produce in both a kind of rigidity, and consequently more naturalness than gracefulness. Watson.

RIGIDLY. adv. [from rigid.]

1. Stiffly; unpliantly.

2. Severely; inflexibly; without remission; without mitigation.

RIGIDNESS. n. f. [from rigid.] Stiffness; severity; inflexibility.

The rest his look
Bound with Gorgonian rigour, not to move. Milt.

2. A convulsive shuddering with sense of cold.

Rigors, chills, and a fever attend every such new suppuration. Blackmore.

A right regimen, during the rigor or cold fit in the beginning of a fever, is of great importance; a long continued rigor is a sign of a strong disease; during the rigor, the circulation is less quick, and the blood actually stagnates in the extremities, and, pressing upon the heart, may produce concretions; therefore a rigor increaseth an inflammation. Arbuthnot.

3. Severity; sternness; want of condescension to others.

Nature has got the victory over passion, all his rigour is turned to grief and pity. Denham.

Rigour makes it difficult for fading virtue to recover. Clarissa.

4. Severity of life; voluntary pain; austerity.

He refused his rigors, esteeming this calamity such a one as should not be outlived, but that it became men to be martyrs to. Fell.

VOL. II.

R I M

Does not looseness of life, and that of necessary sobriety in some, drive others into rigor that are unnecessary? Sprat.

This prince lived in this convent, with all the rigor and austerity of a capuchin. Addison.

5. Strictness; unabated exactness.

It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be relaxed, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hooker.

Heat and cold are rigor, according to philosophical rigor, the efficient, but are names expressing our passions. Glanville.

The base degenerate age requires Severity and justice in its rigor.

This was an impenitent old offending world. Addison.

6. Rage; cruelty; fury.

He at his loss with furious rigor smites,
That strongest oak might seem to overthrow;
The stroke upon his shield to heavy fights,
That to the ground it doubleth him full low. Spenser.

Driven by the necessities of the times, and the temper of the people, more than led by his own disposition to any height and rigor of actions. King Charles.

7. Hardness; not flexibility; solidity; not softness.

The stones the rigor of their kind expel,
And supple into softness as they fell. Dryden.

RIGOROUS. adj. [from rigor.]

1. Severe; allowing no abatement.

He shall be thrown down the Turanian rock
With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scour him further trial,
Than the severity of public power. Shakspeare.

Are these terms hard and rigorous, beyond our capacities to perform? Rogers.

2. Exact; scrupulously nice; as, a rigorous demonstration; a rigorous definition.

RIGOROUSLY. adv. [from rigorous.]

1. Severely; without tenderness or mitigation.

Left they faint
At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,
For I beheld them to it urg'd, and with tears
Bewailing their exiles, all terror hide. Milton.

The people would examine his works more rigorously than himself, and would not forgive the least mistake. Dryden.

2. Exactly; scrupulously; nicely.

RILL. n. f. [rivulus, Lat.] A small brook; a little streamlet.

May thy hummed waves from this
Their full tribute never miss,
From a thousand petty rills,
That tumble down the snowy hills. Milton.

On every thorn delightful wisdom grows,
In every rill a sweet instruction flows,
But some untought, o'erhear the whistling rill,
In spite of sacred lecture blockheads fill. Young.

To RILL. v. n. [from the noun.] To run in small streams.

To! Apollo, mighty king, let envy,
Ill-judging and verbose, from Lathe's lake,
Draw this unweath'ring, while thy favour Admonishes to my ambitious thirst.

The wholesome draught from Avamppe's spring
Gemm'd, and with soft murmurs gently rilling, Adown the mountains where thy daughter haunts. Prior.

RILLET. n. f. [compounded from rill and let.]
A small stream.

A creek of Otie, between two hills, delivering a little fresh rillet into the sea. Curlew.

The industrious muse thus labours to relate
Those rills that attend proud Tamer and her state. Drayton.

RIM. n. f. [uma, Saxon.]

1. A border; a margin.

It keeps off the same thickness near its centre; while its figure is capable of variation towards the rim. Grew.

2. That which encircles something else.

We may not affirm that ruptures are confinable unto one rim, as the peritoneum or rim of the belly.

R I M

may be broke; or its perforations relaxed in either. May.

The drum-maker uses it for rims. May.

RIME. n. f. [rim, Saxon.]

1. Hoar frost.

Breathing upon a glass giveth a dew; and in rime frosts you shall find drops of dew upon the inside of glass windows. Pecon.

In a hoar frost, a rime is a multitude of quadrangular prisms piled without any order one over another. Grew.

2. [uma, Latin.] A hole; a chink. Not used.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet can they contract the rime or chink of their larynx, so as to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested. Brown.

To RIME. v. n. [from the noun.] To freeze with hoar frost.

To RIMPLE. v. a. To pucker; to contract into corrugations. See CRUMPLE and RUMPLE.

The skin was tense, all rimpled and blistered. Wifem.

RIMY. adj. [from rime.] Steamy; foggy; full of frozen mist.

The air is now cold, hot, dry, or moist; and then thin, thick, foggy, rainy, or poisonous. Harvey.

RIND. n. f. [rind, Saxon; rinde, Dutch.] Bark; husk.

Herewith a piteous yelling voice was heard,
Crying, O spare with faulty hands to tear
My tender sides in this rough rind and embar'd. Spenser.

Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power. Shakspeare.

Their plants are neither red nor polished, when drawn out of the water, till their rind have been taken off. Boyle.

Others, whose fruit, burnished with golden rind, Hung amiable. Milton.

Thou canst not touch the freedom of this mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immanc'd. Milton.

This monument, thy maiden beauty's due,
High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view;
On the smooth rind the passenger shall see Thy name engrav'd, and worship Helen's tree. Dryden.

To RIND. v. n. [from the noun.] To decorticate; to bark; to husk.

RING. n. f. [hring, Saxon.]

1. A circle; an orbicular line.

In this last
Met I my father with his bleeding rings,
Their precious gems new lost. Shakspeare.

Bubbles of water, before they began to exhibit their colours to the naked eye, have appeared through a prism guided about with many parallel and horizontal rings. Newton.

2. A circle of gold, or some other matter worn as an ornament.

A quene,
—About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shakspeare.

I have seen old Roman rings very thick about,
and with such large stones in them, that 'tis no wonder a top should reckon them a little cumbersome in the summer. Addison.

3. A circle of metal to be held by.

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.

Some eagle got the ring of his box in his beak, with an intent to let it fall, and devour it. Swift.

4. A circular course.

Chaste Diana,
Goddess presiding o'er the rapid race,
Place me, O place me in the dusty ring,
Where youthful charioteers contend for glory. Smith.

5. A circle made by persons standing round.

Make a ring about the corpse of Caesar,
And let me show you him that made the will. Shakspeare.

The Italians, perceiving themselves almost encircled, cast themselves into a ring, and retired back into the city. Baynard.

R I N

Bound my armour a new ring they made,
And footed it about the sacred shade.
Dryden.

6. A number of bells harmonically tuned.
A squirrel spends his little rage,
In jumping round a rowling cage;
The cage as either side turn'd up,
Striking a ring of bells a-top.
Prior.

7. The sound of bells, or any other sonorous body.
Stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle.
Bacon.
Hawks bells, that have holes, give a greater ring, than if the pellet did strike upon brass in the open air.
Bacon.
Sullen Moloch fled,
Hath left in shadows dread
His burning idol all of blackest hue;
In vain with cymbals ring,
They call the gruly king.
Milton.

8. A sound of any kind.
The king, full of confidence, as he had been victorious in battle, and had prevailed with his parliament, and had the ring of acclamations truth in his ears, thought the rest of his reign should be but play.
Bacon.

To RING. v. a. pret. and part pass. rung.
[hrynagan, Saxon.]

1. To strike bells, or any other sonorous body, so as to make it found.
Ring the alarm bell.
Shakespeare.

2. [from ring.] To encircle.
Talbot.
Who, ring'd about with bold adversity,
Cries out for noble York and Somerset.
Shakespeare.

3. To fit with rings.
Death, death, oh amiable lovely death!
Thou odoriferous fennel, found rostrum's,
Arise forth from thy couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable bones,
And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows,
And ring these fingers with thy household worms.
Shakespeare.

4. To restrain a hog by a ring in his nose.
To RING. v. n.

1. To found as a bell or sonorous metal.
Ring out, ye crystal spheres,
And let your silver chime
Move in melodious time;
And let the base of heav'n's deep organ blow.
No funeral rites nor man in mournful weeds,
Nor mournful bell shall ring her burial.
Shakespeare.
Easy it might be to ring other changes upon the same bells.
Norris.
At I assign a weighty stone he dung;
His face was blunted, and his helmet cong.
Dryden.

2. To practise the art of making music with bells.
Signs for communication may be contrived at pleasures: four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing; each change may, by agreement, have a certain signification.
Hobbes.

3. To found; to resound.
Hercules, missing his page, call'd him by his name aloud, that all the shore rang of it.
Bacon.
The particular ringing found in gold, distinct from the sound of other bodies, has no particular name.
Locke.
With sweeter notes each rising temple ring,
A Raphael painted it, and a Vida sung!
Pope.

4. To utter as a bell.
Kre to, black Hebe's summons
The sword-born beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath ring night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note.
Shakespeare.

5. To tinkle.
My ears full ring with noise; I'm vex'd to death;
Tongue-kil'd, and have not yet recover'd breath.
Dryden.

6. To be filled with a bruit or report.
That profane, atheistical, epicurean rabble,
Whom the whole nation to rings of, are not indeed, what they vote themselves, the wisest men in the world.
South.

RING-BONE. n. f.

R I O

Ring-bone is a hard callous substance growing in the hollow circle of the little pattern of a horse, just above the coronet: it sometimes goes quite round like a ring, and thence it is called the ringbone.
Purrier's Dictionary.

RINGDOVE. n. f. [rhingelduyt, German.] Pigeons are of several sorts, wild and tame; as wood pigeons, dovecot pigeons, and ringdoves.
Mortimer.

RINGER. n. f. [from ring.] He who rings.

RINGLEADER. n. f. [ring and leader.]
The head of a riotous body.
He caused to be executed some of the ringleaders of the Cornish men, in sacrifice to the citizens.
Bacon.
The nobility's caped; the poor people, who had been deluded by these ringleaders, were executed.
Addison.

RINGLET. n. f. [ring, with a diminutive termination.]

1. A small ring.
Silver the lunals, deep projecting o'er;
And gold the ringlets that command the door.
Pope.

2. A curl.
You demy puppets, that
By the moon-shine do the green ringlets make,
Whore out the eye not bits.
Shakespeare.
Never met we,
Upon the beached margin of the sea,
To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind,
But with thy brows thou hast disturb'd our sport.
Shakespeare.

3. A curl.
With ringlets quaint, and wanton windings wove.
Milton.
Her golden tresses in wanton ringlets wav'd,
As the vine curls her tendrils.
Milton.
These in two fable ringlets taught to break,
Once gave new beauties to the hoary neck.
Pope.

RINGSTREAKED. adj. [ring and streaked.]
Circularly streaked.
He removed the he goats that were ringstreaked and spotted, and all the the goats that were speckled.
Gemys.

RINGTAIL. n. f. [ring and tail.] A kind of kite with a whitish tail.
Bailey.

RINGWORM. n. f. [ring and worm.] A circular letter.
It began with a ferrago, making many round spots, which is generally called ringworm.
Wilson.

To RINSE. v. a. [from rein, German,
pure, clear.]

1. To wash; to cleanse by washing.
This last day treaty
Seal'd with'd much treachery, and like a glass
Did break the rinse.
Shakespeare.
Whomsoever he toucheth, and hath not ring'd
his hands in water, he shall be unclean.
Lection.
This must move us humbly to sue unto God, and earnestly to entre him, to wash us thoroughly from our wickedness, and cleanse us from our sins: you, to purge and rinse the fountain thereof, our impurity and polluted hearts.
Perkins.

2. To wash the soap out of clothes.
They cannot boil, nor wash, nor rinse, they say,
With water sometimes ink, and sometimes whey.
According as you meet with word or play.
King.

RISSE. n. f. [from rinse.] One that washes or rinses; a washer.

RIOT. n. f. [riotte, old French; riotto,
Italian.]

1. Wild and loose festivity.
When his bad doing riot hath no curb,
When rage and hot blood are his count'fess,
When means and lawful manners meet together,
Oh! with what wings shall his affection fly,
Tow'rd fighting peril and off'end decay.
Shakespeare.
So senseless of expence,
That he will neither know how to maintain it,
Nor cease his flow of it.
Shakespeare.
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance.
Milton.

2. A sedition; an uproar.

R I P

Transform'd to serpents all, as according To his bold riot.

3. To run riot. To move or act without control or restraint.
One man's head runs riot upon hawks and dice.
L'Estrange.
You never can defend his breeding,
Who, in his satire's running riot,
Could never leave the world in quiet.
Swift.

To RIOT. v. n. [riotte, old French.]

1. To revel; to be dissipated in luxurious enjoyments.
Let us walk honestly as in the day; not a rioting and drunkenness.
Now he exacts of all, wastes in delight,
Riots in pleasure, and neglects the law.
Daniel.

2. To luxuriate; to be tumultuous.
Thy life a long dead calm of fix'd repose;
No pulse that riots, and no blood that glows.
Pope.

3. To banquet luxuriously.

4. To raise a sedition or uproar.

RIOTER. n. f. [from riot.]

1. One who is dissipated in luxury.

2. One who raises an uproar or sedition.

RIOTISE. n. f. [from riot.] Dissolute, in luxury. Obsolete.
From every work he challenged effusion
For contemplation sake; yet other ways
His life he led in lawless riot.
Spenser.

RIOTOUS. adj. [riotteux, Fr. from riot.]

1. Luxurious; wanton; licentiously festive.
What needs we tell their leads and goodly game,
In which was nothing riotous nor vain.
Spenser.
When all our offices have been oppress'd
With riotous feeders,
I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,
And let mine eyes at flow.
Shakespeare.
John came neither eating nor drinking, that a far from the diet of Jerusalem, and other riotous places, but fasted carefully.
Brown.
With them no riotous pomp nor Asian train,
I left a my way with their gaudy tears,
But war severely like itself appears.
Dryden.

2. Seditious; turbulent.

RIOTOUSLY. adv. [from riotous.]

1. Luxuriously; with licentious luxury.
He that gathereth by detrauding his own gathereth for others that shall spend his power riotously.
Keeling.

2. Seditiously; turbulently.

RIOTOUSNESS. n. f. [from riotous.] The state of being riotous.

To RIP. v. a. [ripan, Saxon.]

1. To tear; to lacerate; to cut asunder by a continued act of the knife, or of other force.
You bloody Neeros, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England, bluish for shame.
Shakespeare.
Thou wilt dash their children, and rip up women with child.
King.
The beast prevents the blow,
And upward rips the groin of his audacious foe.
Dryden.

2. To take away by laceration or cutting.
Macedon was from his mother's womb Continually ripp'd.
Shakespeare.
Eteocles, because ripped from his mother's womb, was feigned to be the son of Apollo
Hayward.
Rip this heart of mine
Out of my breast, and show it for a coward's. Oceano.
The conscious husband, whom like typhoons
Charges on her the gale of their dislike;
Aftering fury acts a madman's part,
He'll rip the fatal secret from her breast.
Granville.

3. To disclose; to search out; to tear up;
to bring to view.
Let it be lawful for me to rip up to the very bottom, how and by whom your discipline was planted, at such time as this age we live in, as to make first trial thereof.
Hayward.
You rip up the original of Scotland.
Spenser.

RIP

This ripping up of acanthus is very pleasing unto me, and indeed favourer of some rending. Spenser.
They ripped up all that had been done from the beginning of the rebellion. Clarendon.

The relations considering that a trial would rip up old scores, and discover things not so much to the reputation of the deceased, they dropt their design. Arbuthnot.

RIPE. adj. [ripe, Saxon; rijp, Dutch.]
1. Brought to perfection in growth; mature.

Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the pow'rs above
Put on their instruments. Shakespeare.
Their fruit is improfitable, not ripe to eat. Wisdom.

So may'st thou live, till, like ripe fruit, thou drop Into thy mother's lap, or be with ease
Gather'd, not hardly pluck'd, for death mature. Milton.

2. Resembling the ripeness of fruit.

Those happy smiles,
That play'd on her ripe lip, I could not know
What goods were in her eyes, which parted thence,
As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shakespeare.

3. Complete; proper for use.

Thy letters shall direct your course,
When time is ripe. Shakespeare.

4. Advanced to the perfection of any quality.

There was a pretty redness in his lips,
A little riper and more lusty red
Than that mix'd in his cheeks. Shakespeare.
O early ripe! to thy abundant store,
What could advancing age have added more? Dryden.

5. Finished; consummate.

Beasts are in fertile capacity as ripe even as men themselves, perhaps more ripe. Hooker.
He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one. Shakespeare.

6. Brought to the point of taking effect; fully matured.

He thence shall come,
When this world's dissolution shall be ripe. Milton.
While things were just ripe for a war, the canons, their preceptors, interposed as umpires in the quarrel. Addison.

7. Fully qualified by gradual improvement.

At thirteen years old he was ripe for the university. Felt.
Ripe for heav'n, when fate, Fates calls,
Then shalt thou bear him up, sublime, to me. Dryden.

To RIFE. v. n. [from the adjective.] To ripen; to grow ripe; to be matured.
Ripe is now used.

From hour to hour we ripe and ripe,
And then from hour to hour we rot and rot. Shak.
Slubber not business for my sake, Bassanio;
But stay the very ripening of the time. Shakespeare.
Though no stone tell thee what I was, yet thou,
In my grave's side, see what thou art now;
Yet thou'rt not yet to good, till his death lay
To ripe and mellow there, w' are stubborn clay. Donne.

To RIFE. v. a. To mature; to make ripe.
He is retir'd, to ripe his growing fortunes,
To Scotland. Shakespeare.

RIPPLY. adv. [from ripe.] Maturely; at the fit time.

It is us therefore ripely;
Our chariots and our horsemen be in readiness. Shakespeare.

To R'PEN. v. n. [from ripe.] To grow
ripe; to be matured.

This is the state of man; to-day he pets forth
The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And then he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root;
And then he falls as I do. Shakespeare.
Before the four grape is ripening in the bower. Ussher.

RIS

The pricking of a fruit, before it ripeneth, ripenes
the fruit more suddenly. Bacon.

Trees, that ripen late, blossom sooner; as peaches and cornelians; and it is a work of providence that they blossom so soon; for otherwise they could not have the sun long enough to ripen Bacon.

Alcous on beds of ice are taught to bear,
And strangers to the sun yet ripen here. Granville.
To R'PEN. v. a. To mature; to make ripe.

My father was no traitor;
And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset,
Were growing time once ripen'd to my will. Shak.
When to ripen'd manhood he shall grow,
The greedy sulor shall the seas forego. Dryden.
That I settled
Your father in his throne, was for your sake,
I left th' acknowledgment for time to ripen. Dryden.

The genial sun
Has daily, since his course began,
Rejoic'd the metal to refine,
And ripen'd the Peruvian mine. Addison.

Be this the cause of more than mortal hate,
The rest succeeding time shall ripen into fate. Pope.
Her elements have lost their uses;
Air ripen not, nor earth produces. Swift.

R'PENESS. n. f. [from ripe.]
1. The state of being ripe; maturity.

They have compar'd it to the ripeness of fruits. Wijeman.
Little matter is deposited in the abscess, before it arrives towards its ripeness. Shaap.

2. Full growth.

Time, which made them their same out-live,
To Cowley fence did ripeness give. Denham.

3. Perfection; completion.

To this purpose were those harmonious tunes of psalms devised for us, that they, which are either in years but young, or touching perfection of virtue as yet not grown to ripeness, might, when they think they sing, learn. Hooker.

This royal infant promises
Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings,
Which time shall bring to ripeness. Shakespeare.

I to manhood am arriv'd too near,
And inward ripeness doth much less appear,
That some more timely happy spirits indu'th. Milton.

4. Fitness; qualification.

Men must endure
Their going hence, ev'n as their coming hither.
Ripeness is all. Shakespeare.

R'PPEL. n. f. [from rip.] One who rips;
one who tears; one who lacerates.

To R'PPEL. v. n. To fret on the surface,
as water swiftly running.

R'PPEL. n. f. A gratuity, or reward given to tenants, after they had reaped their lord's corn. Bailey.

To RISE. v. n. pret. rose; part. risin.
Cowley has ris, for rose; so has Jonson.
[ris, Saxon; reizen, Dutch.]

1. To change a jacent or recumbent, to an erect posture.

I have seen her rise from her bed, and throw her night-gown upon her. Shakespeare.
The archbishop received him sitting, for, said he,
I am too old to rise. Earl of Orrery.

2. To get up from rest.

Never a wife leads a better life than she does,
do what she will; go to bed when she list, rise
when she list. Shakespeare.
As wild wiles in the desert, go they forth to their work, rising betimes for a prey. Job.
That is to live,
To rest secure, and not rise up to grieve. Daniel.
Thy mansion wants thee, Adam, rise. Milton.

3. To get up from a fall.

True in our fall,
False in our promis'd rising. Milton.

4. To spring; to grow up.

They imagine
For one forbidden tree a multitude,
Now ris to work them farther woe. Milton.

5. To gain elevation of rank or fortune.

RIS

Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall. Shak.
If they rise not with their service, they will sink their service tall with them. Bacon.

To rise 't' the world,
No wise man that's honest should expect. Orrey.

Those, that have been raised by some great minister, trample upon the steps by which they rise, to rival him. South.

6. To swell.

If the bright spot stay in his place, it is a rising of the burning. Leviticus.

7. To ascend; to move upward.

The sap in old trees is not so frank as to rise all to the boughs, but trech by the way, and putteth out moils. Bacon.

If two plane polis'd plates of a polis'd lookingglass be laid together, so that their sides be parallel, and at a very small distance from one another, and then their lower edges be dipped into water, the water will rise up between them. Newton.

8. To break out from below the horizon,
as the sun.

He maketh the sun to rise on the evil and the good. Matthew.

He affirmeth, that tunny is fat upon the rising of the Pleiades, and departs upon Acturus. Brown.

Whether the sun
Rise on the earth, or earth rise on the sun. Milton.

9. To take beginning; to come into existence or notice.

Only he spoke, and every thing that is,
Out of the fruitful womb of nothing ris. Cowley.

10. To begin to act.

High winds began to rise. Milton.
With Vulcan's rage the rising winds conspire,
And near our palace rolls the flood of fire. Dryden.

11. To appear in view.

The poet must lay out all his strength, that his words may be glowing, and that every thing he denotes may immediately present itself, and rise up to the reader's view. Addison.

12. To change a station; to quit a siege.

He, rising with small honour from Gunza, and feeling the power of the christians, was gone. Knolles.

13. To be excited; to be produced.

Inude you thank'd me; but a nobler gratitude
Rise in her soul; for from that hour the lov'd me. Orrey.

A thought rose in me, which often perplexes men of contemplative natures. Spectator.

14. To break into military commotions;
to make insurrections.

At our heels all hell should rise,
With blackest insurrection. Milton.

Nunidia's spacious kingdom lies
Ready to rise at its young prince's call. Addison.

No more shall motion against nation rise,
Nor silent warriors meet with hateful eyes. Pope.

15. To be roused; to be excited to action.

Who will rise up for me against evil-doers? or who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity? Psalms.

Gather together, come against, and rise up to the battle. Seremiah.

16. To make hostile attack.

If any man hate his neighbour, lie in wait, and rise up against him, and smite him mortally, and fleeeth into one of the cities, the elders of his city shall fetch him thence. Deuteronomy.

17. To grow more or greater in any respect.

A hideous gabble *ris*es loud
Among the builders. Milton.

The great duke *ris*es on them in his demands, and will not be satisfied with less than a hundred thousand crowns, and a solemn embassy to beg pardon. Addison.

18. To increase in price.

Bullion is *ris*en to six shillings and five pence the ounce; i. e. that an ounce of uncoined silver will exchange for an ounce and a quarter of coined silver. Locke.

19. To be improved.

From such an untainted couple, we can hope to late our family rise to its ancient splendour of face, air, countenance, and shape. Taller.

R I S

20. To elevate the style.

Your author always will the best advise,
Fall when he falls, and when he rises, rise.

Roscommon.

21. To be revived from death.

After I am risen again, I will go before you.

Matthew.

The stars of morn shall see him rise

Out of his grave

Milton.

22. To come by chance.

As they 'gun his library to view,
And antique register, for to advise,
There chanced to the prince's hand to rise
An ancient book.

Spenser.

23. To be elevated in situation.

He bar'd an ancient oak of all her boughs;
Then on a rising ground the trunk he plac'd,
Which with the spoils of his dead foe he grac'd.

Dryden.

A house he saw upon a rising.

Ah, on banks of rising grounds near rivers, will thrive exceedingly.

Mortimer.

Rise. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of rising, locally or figuratively.

The act of mounting from the ground.
In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards and then forwards, with so much the greater force; for the hands go backward before they take their rise.

Bacon.

3. Eruption; ascent.

Upon the candle's going out, there is a sudden rise of water; for the flame filling no more place,
the air and water succeed.

Bacon.

The hill submits itself

In small descents, which do its height beguile;
And sometimes mounts, but to us billows play,
Whole rise not hinders, but makes short our way.

Dryden.

4. Place that favours the act of mounting aloft.

Rais'd so high, from that convenient rise
She took her flight, and quickly reached the skies.

Creech.

Since the arguments against them rise from common received opinions, it happens in controversial disputes, as it does in the settling of towns, where, if the ground be but firm, whereof the ba-teries are erected, there is no farther inquiry of whom it is borrowed, so it affords but a fit rise for the present purpose.

Locke.

5. Elevated place.

Such a rise, as doth at once invite
A pleasure, and a reverence from the sight.

Denham.

6. Appearance as of the sun in the east.

Phœbus! stay;

The world to which you fly to rest,
From us to them can pay your haste
With no such object, and salute your rise
With no such wonder, as De Mornay's eyes.

Waller.

7. Increase in any respect.

8. Increase of price.

Upon a breach with Spain, must be considered the present state of the king's treasure, the rise or fall that may happen in his constant revenue by a Spanish war.

Temple.

The bishops have had share in the gradual rise of lands.

Swift.

9. Beginning; original.

It has its rise from the lazy admonitions of those who give rules, and propoſe examples, without joining practice with their instructions.

Locke.

All wickedness taketh its rise from the heart, and the design and intention with which a thing is done, frequently discriminates the goodness or evil of the action.

Nelson.

His reputation quickly peopled it, and gave rise to the republick, which calls itself after his name.

Addison.

10. Elevation; increase of sound.

In the ordinary rises and falls of the voice,
there fall out to be two become between the unison and the diapason.

Bacon.

Rise. n. f. [from rise.] One that rises.

Riser. n. f. [from rise.] One that rises.

R I V

The life Rise, where the palace stands

Of th' early Rise, with the rosy hands,

Active Aurora; where the loves to dance.

Chapman.

Risibility. n. f. [from risible.] The quality of laughing.

How comes lowliness of stile to be so much the propriety of satire, that without it a poet can be no more a satyrist, than without risibility he can be a man.

Druden.

Whatever the philosophers may talk of their risibility, nothing is a more noble expression than laughing.

Arbutnot.

RISIBLE. adj. [risible, Fr. risibilis, Lat.]

1. Having the faculty or power of laughing.

We are in a merry world, laughing is our business; as it, because it has been made the definition of man that he is risible, his manhood consisted in nothing else.

Government of the Tongue.

2. Ridiculous; exciting laughter.

RISK. n. f. [risque, Fr. risque, Spanish.]

Hazard; danger; chance of harm.

Some run the risk of an absolute ruin for the gaining of a present supply.

Efrange.

When an intemperate display of discipline, nurtured into contempt of all order by a long risk of licence, shall appear before a church governor, it verily and resolution are that governor's virtue.

By allowing himself in what is innocent, he would run the risk of being betrayed into what is not so.

Atterbury.

An innocent man ought not to run an equal risk with a guilty one.

Clayton.

To RISK. v. a. [risquer, Fr.] To hazard;

to put to chance; to endanger.

Who would hope new fame to taste,

Or risk his well-established praise,

That, his high genius to approve,

Had drawn a George or car'd a love?

Addison.

RISER. n. f. [from risk.] He who risks,

He thither came, 't observe and imoak

What courtes other rykers took.

Butler.

Riss. The obsolete preterit of rise.

Ris not the contumacious and left their places,
So soon as thou sat it down; and led thy side?

Ben Jonson.

RITE. n. f. [rit, Fr. ritus, Lat.] Solemn act of religion; external observance.

The ceremonies we have taken from such as were before us, are not things that belong to this or that sect, but they are the ancient rites and customs of the church.

Hooker.

It is by God conferred into a sacrament, a holy rite, a means of conveying to the worthy receiver the benefits of the body and blood of Christ.

Hammond.

When the prince her funeral rites had paid,

He plow'd the Tyrrhene seas

RITUAL. adj. [rituel, Fr.] Solemnly ceremonious; done according to some religious institution.

Instant I bade the priests prepare

The ritual furniture, and solemn pray'r.

Prior.

If to tradition were added certain constant ritual and emblematical observances, as the emblems were expressive, the memory of the thing recorded would remain.

Forbes.

RITUAL. n. f. [from the adjective.] A book in which the rites and observances of religion are set down.

An heathen ritual could not instruct a man better than these several pieces of antiquity in the particular ceremonies, that attended different sacrifices.

Addison.

RITUALIST. n. f. [from ritual.] One skilled in the ritual.

RIVAGE. n. f. [Fr.] A bank; a coast.

Not in use.

Think

You stand upon the rivage, and behold

A city on th' incessant billows dancing;

For to appear this fleet.

Shakespeare.

RIVAL. n. f. [rivalis, Latin.]

1. One who is in pursuit of the same thing which another man pursues; a competitor.

R I V

Oh love! thou sternly dost thy pow'r maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain.

Dryden.

2. A competitor in love.

She saw her father was grown her adverse party, and yet her fortune such as she must favour her rival.

Sidney.

France and Burgundy,

Great rivals in our younger daughter's love. Shak.

Your rival's image in your worth I view;

And what I lov'd in him, esteem in you. Gemelle.

RIVAL. adj. Standing in competition;

making the same claim; emulous.

Had I but the means

To hold a rival place with one of them,

I should be fortunate.

Shakespeare.

Equal in years, and rival in renown

With Epaphus, the youthful Phaeton

Lake honour claims.

Dryden.

You bark to be employ'd.

While Venus is by rival dogs enjoy'd.

Dryden.

To RIVAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stand in competition with another;

to oppose.

I hope, that have been raised by the interest of some great minister, trample upon the steps by which they rise, to rival him in his greatness, and at length step into his place.

South.

2. To emulate; to endeavour to equal or excel.

Ambitious fool! with horny hoofs to pass

O'er hollow arches of resounding bruis;

To rival thunder in its rapid course,

And imitate immutable force.

Dryden.

O thou, too great to rival or to praise,

Forgive, I lamented shade, these duteous lays.

Lee had thy fire, and Congress had thy wit,

And copyists, here and there, some likeness hit;

But none possess'd thy graces, and thy ease;

In thee alone 'twas natural to please!

Hart.

To RIVAL. v. a. To be competitors. Out of use.

Burgundy,

We first address'd toward you, who with the king

Have rival'd for our daughter.

Shakespeare.

RIVALITY. n. f. [rivalitas, Lat. from

RIVALRY. n. f. [rival.] Competition, emulation.

It is the privilege of posterity to set matters right between those antagonists, who, by their rivalries, divided a whole age.

Addison.

RIVALSHIP. n. f. [from rival.] The state or character of a rival.

To RIVE. v. a. pret. rived; part. riven.

[ryft, broken, Saxon; ryten, Dutch;

rater, French, to drive.] To split;

to cleave; to divide by a blunt instrument,

to force in disruption.

At his haughty helmet

So hugely struck, that it the steel did rive

And cleit his head.

Spenser.

The varlet at his plant was grieved sore,

That his deep wounded heart in two did rive.

Spenser.

Through riven clouds and molten firmament,

The fierce three-forked engine making way,

Both lofty towers and highest trees hath rent.

Spenser.

O Cicero!

I have seen tempests, when the folding winds

Have riv'd the knotty oaks; but ne'er till now

Did I go through a tempest dropping fire.

Shakespeare.

As one he fit to escap'd from cruel fight,

Sore toil'd, his riven arms to havock heav'n.

Milton.

The neighbouring forests, formerly shaken and riven with the thunder-bolts of war, did envy the sweet peace of Drama.

South.

Had I not been blind, I might have seen

You riven oak, the timber of the green.

Dryden.

Let it come;

Let the fierce light'ning blast, the thunder rive me.

South.

To RIVE. v. a. To be split; to be divided by violence.

R I V

Prophane river, ships, and breaks in any direction.

To RIVE, for derive or direct. Not used. Ten thousand French have taken the sacrament, To rise their dangerous artillery.

Upon no christian soul but English Talbot. Shaksp.
To RIVEL, v. a. [replebe, Sax. corrugated, rumped.] To contract into wrinkles and corrugations.

Then droop'd the fading flow'rs, their beauty fled,
And clos'd their sickly eyes and hung the head,
And rivet'd up with heat, lay dying in their bed.

Dryden.
And since that plenteous autumn now is past,
Whose grapes and peaches have undign'd your taste,
Take in good part, from our poor poet's board,
Such rivet'd fruits as winter can afford. Dryden.
Alum sticks, with contracting pow'r,
Shrink his thin efface like a rivet'd flow'r.

Pope.

RIVEN. The part of river.

RIVER n. f. [riviere, Fr. rivus, Lat.] A land current of water bigger than a brook.

It is a most beautiful country, being stored throughout with many goodly rivers, replenished with all sorts of fish. Spenser.

The first of these rivers has been celebrated by the Latin poets for the gentleness of its course, as the other for its rapidity. Addison.

RIVER-DRAGON, n. f. A crocodile. A name given by Milton to the king of Egypt.

Thus with ten wounds
The river-dragon taun'd at length, tumbling
To let his journeymen depart. Paradise Lost.

RIVERET, n. f. [diminutive of river.] A small stream; a rill.

Bringing all their riverets in,
There ends; a new song to begin. Drayton.

Calls down riveret from her springs,
Their queen upon her way to him. Drayton.

RIVER-GOD, n. f. Tutelary deity of a river.

His wig hung as frail as the hair of a river-god
Rising from the water. Arbutnot.

RIVER-HORSE, n. f. Hippopotamus.

As plants ambiguous between sea and land,
The river-horse and scaly crocodile. Milton.

RIVER, n. f. [river, Fr. to break the point of a thing; to drive.] A fastening pin clenched at both ends.

The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers clouting rivets up
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakspere.

Thy armour
I'll crush, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shakspere.

Though Valeria's fair, and though she loves me too,

'Gainst her my soul is arm'd on every part;
Yet there are secret rivets to my heart,
Where Bernice's charms have found the way,
Subtle as lightnings. Dryden.

The verse in fashion is, when numbers flow
So smooth and equal, that no light can find
The rivet, where the polish'd piece was join'd. Dryden.

The rivets of those wings incline'd Fit not each other. Dryden.

This instrument should move easy upon the rivet. Shaksp.

To RIVET, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with rivets.

I has man,
Hail our fire were out, would fetch down new
Out of the hand of Jove; and rivet him
To Cerberus, should he but frown. Ben Jonson.

2. To fasten strongly; to make immovable.

You were to blame to part with
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And rivet'd with oath unto your flesh. Shaksp.

R O A

Why should I write this down, that's rivetted, Screw'd to my memory? Shakspere.

What one party thought to rivet so a settledness by the influence of the Scots, that the other rejected. King Charles.

Till fortune's fruitless spite had made it known,
Her blows not shook but rivetted his throne. Dryden.

Thus hath God not only rivetted the notion of himself into our natures, but likewise made the belief of his being, necessary to the peace of our minds and happiness of society. Tillotson.

In the eye lies those things rivetted which are loose, where will you begin to rectify the mistake? Locke.

Where we use words of a loose and wandering signification, hence follows mistake and error, which those maxims, brought as proofs to establish propositions, wherein the terms stand for undetermined ideas, do by their authority confirm and rivet.
Locke.

Rivet and nail me where I stand, ye powers!
Congreve.

They provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison.

A similitude of nature and manners, in such a degree as we are capable of, unite the holy knot, and rivet the friendship between us. Atterbury.

3. To drive or clench a rivet.

In rivetting, the pin you rivet in should stand upright to the plate you rivet it upon; for if it do not stand upright, you will be forced to set it upright, after it is rivetted. Mozon.

RIVULET, n. f. [ruvulus, Lat.] A small river; a brook; a streamlet.

By fountain or by shady rivulet,
He fought them. Milton.

The veins, where innumerable little rivulets have their confluence into the common channel of the blood. Bentley.

I saw the rivulet of Salsurata, formerly called Albula, and smelt the stench that rises from its water, which Martial mentions. Addison.

RINDOLLAR, n. f. A German coin, worth about four shillings and sixpence sterling.

Diet.

ROACH, n. f. [from rutulus, Lat. red-haired.]

A roach is a fish of no great reputation for his dainty taste: his spawn is accounted much better than any other part of him: he is accounted the water sheep, for his simplicity and sluggishness, and it is noted, that roaches recover strength, and grow in a fortnight after spawning. Hutton.

If a gudgeon meet a roach,
He dare not venture to approach;
Yet still he leaps at flies. Swift.

ROAD, n. f. [rade, Fr. route, Fr. route is via trita.]

1. Large way; path.

Would you not think him a madman, who,
whilst he might easily ride on the beaten road way,
should trouble himself with breaking up of gaps?
Suckling.

To God's eternal house direct the way,
A broad and ample road. Milton.

The liberal man dwells always in the road. Fall.
To be indifferent whether we embrace falsehood or truth, is the great road to error. Locke.

Could stupid atoms, with impetuous speed,
By dirt rent roads and adverse ways proceed,
That here they might encounter, here unite. Milchmore.

There is but one road by which to climb up.

2. [rade, Fr.] Ground where ships may anchor.

I should be full
Peering in maps for ports and roads;
And every object that might make me fear
Misfortune to my ventures. Shakspere.

About the island are many roads, but only one harbour. Sandys.

3. Inroad; incursion.

The Volcians stand
Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road Upon, again. Shakspere.

R O A

Caton was desirous of the spoil, for he was, by the former road into that country, famous and rich. Knutten.

The king of Scotland, seeing none came in to Perkin, turned his enterprise into a road, and washed Northumberland with fire and sword. Bacon.

4. Journey. The word seems, in this sense at least, to be derived from rode, the preterit of ride: as we say, a short ride; an easy ride.

With easy roads he came to Leicester,
And lodg'd in the abbey. Shakspere.
He from the east his flaming road begins.

Milton.

5. The act, or state of travelling.

Some taken from their shops and farms, others from their sports and pleasures, these at suits of law, those at gaming tables, some on the road, others at their own fire sides. Law.

To ROAM, v. n. [romigare, Italian. See
Room.] To wander without any certain purpose; to ramble; to rove; to play the vagrant. It is imagined to come from the pretences of vagrants, who always said they were going to Rome.

Five summers have I spent in farthest Greece,
Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia. Shakspere.

Daphne roaming through a thorny wood. Shakspere.

The lonely fox roams far abroad,
On secret rymie bent, and midnight fraud. Prior.

What were unlighten'd man,
A savage roaming through the woods and wilds
In quest of prey. Thomson.

To ROAM, v. a. To range; to wander over.

Now fowls in their clay nests were couch'd,
And now wild beasts came forth the woods to roam. Milton.

ROAMER, n. f. [from roam.] A rover;
a rambler; a wanderer; a vagrant.

ROAN, adj. [rouen, Fr.]

Roan horse is a horse of a bay, sorrel, or black colour, with grey or white spots interpersed very thick. Farrar's Dictionary.

To ROAR, v. n. [roapan, Sax.]

1. To cry as a lion or other wild beast.

Roaring bulls he would him make to tame. Spenser.

Warwick and Montague,
That in their chains fetter'd the kingly lion,
And made the torch tremble when they roar'd. Shakspere.

The young lions roared upon him, and yelled. Jeremiah.

The death of Daphne woods and hills deplore,
They cut the bound to Laby's desert shore,
The Labyan lions hear and hearing roar. Dryden.

2. To cry in distress.

At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pangs blith'd at him. Shakspere.

Sole on the barren sands the suffering chief Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.

3. To sound as the wind or sea.

South, east, and west, with mix'd confusion roar,
And rowl the tossing billows to the shore. Dryden.

Loud as the wolves on Orca's stormy sleep,
Howl to the roaring of the northern deep. Pope.

4. To make a loud noise.

The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar. Milton.

Consider what fatigues I've known,
How oft I croll'd where carts and coaches roar'd. Gay.

ROAR, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The cry of the lion or other beast.

The wanted war is up,
And his continual through the tedious night. Thomson.

ROB

2. An outcry of distress.
3. A clamour of merriment.
Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs?
Your dances of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar?
Shakespeare.
4. The sound of the wind or sea.
The roar
Of loud Euroclydon.
Philip.
5. Any loud noise.
Deep throated engines belch'd, whose roar
Imperv'd with outrageous noise the air.
Milton.
On a plat of rising ground,
I hear the far-off rattle sound,
Over some wide-water'd shore,
Swinging slow with lullen roar.
Milton.
When cautious did diffuse,
Preventing puffs, the terror, and the news;
Our neighbour princes trembled at their roar.
Fuller.
The waters, listening to the trumpet's roar,
Obey the summons, and forsake the shore.
Dryden.
ROARER. n. f. [from roar.] A noisy brutal man.
The English roarsers put down all.
Housh.
ROARY. adj. [better roxy; rores, Latin.] Dewy.
On Lebanon his foot he set,
And shook his wings with roary May dew wet.
Fairfax.
To ROAST. v. a. [rufir, rotir, Fr. ruffen, Germ. geroast, Sax. roasted; from rastrum, Lat. a grate; to roast, being, in its original sense, to broil on a gridiron.]
1. To dress meat, by turning it round before the fire.
He roasteth not that which he took in hunting.
Dewey of Pety.
Roasting and boiling are below the dignity of your office.
Swift.
2. To impart dry heat to flesh.
Here elements have lost their uses,
Air ripens not, nor earth produces;
Fire will not roast, nor water boil.
Swift.
3. To dress at the fire without water.
In eggs boiled and roasted, there is scarce difference to be discerned.
Bacon.
4. To heat any thing violently.
Roasted in wrath and fire,
He thus exhaled with congregate gore,
Old Priam seeks.
Shakespeare.
ROAST, for roasted.
He lost his roast beef stomach, not being able to touch a sirlon.
Addison.
And if Dan Congreve judges right,
Roast beef and ale make Priam fight.
Prior.
It warms the cook-maid, not to burn
The roast meat, which it cannot turn.
Swift.
To rule the ROAST. To govern; to manage; to preside. It was perhaps origin ally roist, which signified a tumult, to direct the populace.
Where championous ruleth the roist,
There daisie disorder is most.
Taffet.
The new made duke, that rules the roist.
Shakespeare.
Alma flap dath, is all again
In ev'ry sinew, nerve, and vein;
Runs here and there, like Hamlet's ghost,
While every where she rules the roist.
Prior.
ROB. n. f. [I believe Arabick.] Insipidated juice.
The infusion, being evaporated to a thicker consistence, passeth into a jelly, rob. extract, which contain all the virtues of the infusion.
Arabian.
To ROB. v. a. [rubber, old Fr. rubbare, Italian.]
1. To deprive of any thing by unlawful force, or by secret theft; to plunder.
To be robbed, according to the present use of the word, is to be injured by theft secret or violent; to rob, is to take away

ROB

- by unlawful violence; and to steal, is to take away privately.
Is't not enough to break into my garden,
And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds,
But thou wilt brave me with these sawcy terms?
Shakespeare.
Our fins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity.
King Charles.
I have not here designed to rob him of any part of that commendation, which he has so justly acquired from the whole author, whose fragments only fall to my portion.
Dryden.
The water nymphs lament their empty urns,
Perotus, rob'd of silver Dirce, moans.
Addison.
2. To set free; to deprive of something bad. Ironical.
Our house is still, and thou a merry devil,
Dull'st rob it of some taste of tediousness.
Shakespeare.
3. To take away unlawfully.
Better be dishon'd of all, than furnish a carriage to rob love from any.
Shakespeare.
Procure, that the nourishment may not be robbed and drawn away.
Bacon.
Nor will I take from any man his due;
But thus, assuming all, he robs from you.
Dryden.
Oh double felonye on things divine,
To rob the relic, and deface the shrine!
Dryden.
ROBBER. n. f. [from rob.] One that plunders by force, or steals by secret means; a plunderer; a thief.
The hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee, I'm your host,
With robbers hands, my hospitable favour
You should not rustle thus.
Shakespeare.
Had'st thou not committed Notorious murder on those thirty men
At Micion;
Then, like a robber, strip'd'st them of their robes.
Milton.
The robber must run, ride, and use all the desperate ways of escape; and probably, after all, his sin betrays him to the gaol, and from thence advances him to the gallows.
South.
Bold Prometheus did aspire,
And stole from heav'n the seeds of fire;
A train of ills, a ghastly crew,
The robber's blazing tract pursue.
Dryden.
Public robbers are more criminal than petty and common thieves.
Davenant.
ROBBERY. n. f. [roberie, old Fr. from rob.] Theft perpetrated by force or with privacy.
Thieves for their robbery have authority,
When judges deal themselves.
Shakespeare.
A room or robbery
Shook down my mellow hangings.
Shakespeare.
Some more effectual way might be found, for suppressing common thefts and robberies.
Temple.
ROBE. n. f. [robbe, Fr. rubba, Italian; rauba, low Lat.] A gown of state; a dress of dignity.
Through tatter'd cloaths small ices do appear;
Robes and sun d'gowns hide all.
Shakespeare.
My Nan shall be the queen of all fairs,
Finely attird in a robe of white.
Shakespeare.
The last good king, whom willing Rome obey'd,
Was the poor offspring of a captive maid;
Yet he stole robes of empire justly bore,
Which Romulus, our sacred founder, wore.
Dryden.
To ROBE. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress pompously; to invest.
What christian soldier will not be touched with a religious emulation, to see an order of Jesus do such service for enlarging the christian borders; and an order of St. George only to robe, and feast, and perform juries and observances?
Bacon.
There in long robes the royal magi stand;
The sage Chaldeans rob'd in white appear'd,
And Brachmans.
Pope.
Robed in loose array the came to bathe.
Thomson.

These redundant locks,
Robustious to no purpose, clustring down,
Vain monument of strength.
Milton.
2. Boisterous; violent; unwieldy.
The men sympathize with the mastiffs, in robustious and rough coming on.
Shakespeare.
It tends me to hear a robustious periwinkle-sped fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the evis of the gowning.
Shakespeare.
While I was miming this young robustious fellow, that I'd spark, who was nothing but skin and bone, slapt through my fingers.
Dryden.
Rump loving mistress.
Thomson.
3. Requiring strength.
The tenderness of a sprain remains a good while after, and leaves a lasting caution in the man, not to put the part quickly again to any robust employment.
Locke.
4. Robustious is now only used in low language, and in a sense of contempt.
ROBUSTNESS. n. f. [from robust] Strength; vigour.
But I may cancer a robustness on my son's limbs, but will he letate his antilethals.
Arbutnot.
ROCAMBOLE. n. f. See GARLICK.

Mortimer.
ROCHET. n. f. [rochet, Fr. rochetum, from roccus, low Latin, a coat.]
1. A surplice; the white upper garment of the priest officiating.
What zealous phrenzy and the frantic fear,
That tunc the rochet to such rags as these?
Ciccardi.
2. [rubellio, Lat.] A fish.
Sung.
ROCK. n. f. [roc, roche, Fr. rocca, Italian]
1. A vast mass of stone, fixed in the earth.
The splitting rocks cow'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides.
Shakespeare.
There be rock herbs; but those are where there is some mould.
Pope.
Distilling some of the tincted liquor, all that came over was as limpid and colourless as rock water, and the liquor remaining in the vessel deeply ceruleous.
Boyle.
These lesser rocks, or great bulky stones, are they not manifest fragments?
Parnet.
Of amber a nodule, invested with a coat, called rock amber.
Hawland.
Pigeons or doves are of several sorts; as wood pigeons and rock pigeons.
Mortimer.
Ye darksome pines, that o'er yon rocks recline,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind.
Pope.
2. Protecting; defence. A Scriptural loc.

R O C

Though the rocks of Egypt break under the head of him that leans on them, yet the rock of Israel will be an everlasting stay. King Charles.
[rock, Danish; rocca, Italian; rucca, Spanish; spinrock, Dutch] A distaff held in the hand, from which the wool was spun by twirling a ball below.

A leamed and a mainly foul
I purpos'd to; that should with even powers,
The rock, the spindle, and the flaxers controul
Of destiny, and spin her own free hours. B. Jonson.
On the rock's scanty measure place
Of flax, and turn the wheel's space. Dryden.
Flow from the rock my flax, and swiftly flow,
Pursue thy thread, the spindle runs below. Parnell.
To ROCK, v. a. [roquer, French.]

1. To thake; to move backward and forward.

It, by a quicker rocking of the engine, the locks were more swiftly shaken, it would, like water, vibrate to and fro. Boyle.

The wind was loud; the whist'ring found
Was dumb; a rising earthquake rock'd the ground.

Dryden.
A living tortoise; being turned upon its back, could help itself only by its neck and head, by pushing against the ground to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out the side towards which the inequality of the ground might more easily permit to roll its shell. Ray.

2. To move the cradle, in order to procure sleep.

Come, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be.

Shakespeare.
Leaning her head upon my breast,
My panting heart rock'd her asleep.

Suckling.
My bloody resolutions,
Like sick and froward children,

Were rock'd asleep by reason. Denham.
While his secret soul on Flanders preys,
He rocks the cradle of the babe of Spain. Dryden.

High in his hall, rock'd in a chain of slute,
The king with his tempestuous council late.

Dryden.

Sleep rock thy brain,
And never come mischance between us twain!

Shakespeare.
To ROCK, v. n. To be violently agitated;
to reel to and fro.

The rocking town
Suppl'd its their footsteps, to and fro they reel.

Philips.
Like this rocking of the battlements. Young.

ROCK-DOE, n. f. A species of deer.

The rock-doe breeds chiefly upon the Alps; a creature of admirable swiftness; and may probably be first mentioned in the book of Job's her horns grow up like trees far backward, as to reach over her back. Gru.

ROCK-AT-RV, n. f. A name given improperly by lapidaries and jewellers to the garnet, when it is of a very strong, but not deep red, and has a fair cast of the blue. Hill.

Rock ruby is of a deep red, and the breadth of all the kinds. Woodward.

ROCK-SALT, n. f. Mineral salt.

Two pieces of transparent rock salt; one white,
the other red. Woodward.

ROCKLER, n. f. [from rock.] One who rocks
the cradle.

His fellow, who the narrow bed had kept,
Was weary, and without a rocker slept. Dryden.

ROCKET, n. f. [rochetto, Italian.] An artificial firework, being a cylindrical case of paper filled with nitre, charcoal, and sulphur, which, mounts in the air to a considerable height, and there bursts.

Every rocket ended in a constellation, showing the air with a shower of silver spangles. Addison.

When bonfires blaze, your vagrant works shall rise
In rockets, till they reach the wondrous skies.

Garth.

R O D

I, like a poor bark, of lily and tackling rest,
Rush all to pieces on thy rocky holom. Shakespeare.

ROD, n. f. [roede, Dutch.]

1. A long twig.

Some chuse a hazle rod of the same year's shoot, and this they bind on to another straight stick of any wood, and walking lightly over those places, where they suspect the bowels of the earth to be enriched with metals, the wand will, by bowing towards it, discover it. Boyle.

2. A kind of sceptre.

Sh' had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace. Shakespeare.

The pastoral herd of Hermes, or his opiate rod.

Milton.
O gentle sleep, I cry'd,
Why is thy gift to me alone deny'd?

Mildest of beings, friend to every clime,
Where lies my error, what has been my crime?

Beasts, birds, and cattle feel thy balm; my rod;
The drowsy mountains wave, and seem to nod;
The torrents cease to chide, the seas to roar,
And the built waves recline upon the shore.

Haste.
3. Any thing long and slender.

Let the shepherd
Increase his tackle, and his rod rot. Gay.

Hail, ye Cylops, with your forked rods,
This rebel love has won all the gods,
And every hour by love is made,
Some heaven defying Enclade. Granville.

Demetrius was a measuring rod for taking the dimensions of buildings, and lignted the same thing as peris, taken as a measure of length. Arbuthnot.

5. An instrument of correction, made of twigs tied together.

If he be but care to tickle silly rogues, he may punish him with stocks; but if he be found again for loitering, he may scourge him with whips or rods. Spenser.

I am whipt and scourg'd with rods,
Nettled, and stung with pincurs, when I hear
Of oloughbrooke. Shakespeare.

In this condition the rod of God hath a voice to be heard, and he, whose office it is, ought now to expound to the sick man the particular meaning of the voice. Hammond.

Grant me and my people the benefit of thy chastisements; that thy rod, as well as thy staff, may comfort us. King Charles.

They trembling learn to throw the fatal dart,
And under rods of rough centurions smart.

Dryden.
As soon as that sentence is executed, these rods,

R O G

these instruments of divine discipline, are thrown into the fire. Matthew 3.

A wre's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

RODE, The pret. of ride.

He in paternal glory rode. Milton.

RODOMONTADE, n. f. [from a boastful boisterous hero of Ariosto, called Rodomonte; rodomontade, French.] An empty noisy bluster or boast; a rant.

He only forces to be sport for his company;
for in these gamestome days men will give him
blats, which may put him upon his rodomontades.

Government of the Tongue.
The liberties of painting have no other model
but a rodomontade genius, and very irregular, which violently hurries them away. Dryden.

He talks extravagantly in his passion, but if I would quote a hundred passages in Ben Jonson's Cethagus, I could shew that the rodomontades of Almanzor are neither so rational nor impossible, for Cethagus tries to destroy nature. Dryden.

To RODOMONTADE, v. n. [from the noun.]
To brag thronomically; to boast like Rodomonte.

ROE, n. f. [na, na-beon, Saxon.]

ROGA'TION, n. f. [rogation, French; from rogo, Latin.] Latany; supplication.

He partictich the rogations of honies before in u, and addeth unto them that which the present necessity required. Hooker.

Supplications, with this solemnity for appeasing of God's wrath, were of the Greek church termed honies, and rogations of the Latin. Taylor.

ROGATION-WEEK, n. f. The second week before Whitsunday; thus called from three fasts observed therein, the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, called rogation days, because of the extraordinary prayers and processions then made for the fruits of the earth, or as a preparation for the devotion of Holy Thursday. Dier.

ROGUE, n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. A wandering beggar; a vagrant; a vagubond.

For fear lest we, like rogues, should be reputed,
And for ear marked heads abroad be bruted.

Spenser.
The Geniff and the marshal may do the more good, and more terrify the idle rogue. Spenser.

The train of people and wicked condemned men spoiled the plantation, for they will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy and slothful. Deacon.

The troops are all scattered, and the commanders very poor rogues. Shakespeare.

2. A knave; a dishonest fellow; a villain;
a thief.

Thou wilt me like a rogue and a villain.

Shakespeare.
A rogue upon the highway may have an arm and take on a man's head as cleave as the executioner; but then there is a vast disparity, when one action a murderer and the other justice. South.

He call rogue and thief from the garret,
He means you no more mischief than a parrot.

Dryden.

The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wise,
And ev'n the best, by fits, what they despise. Pope.

3. A name of slight tenderness and endearment.

I never knew a woman love man so.
—Alas, poor rogue, I think indeed she loves. Shakespeare.

4. A wag.
Oh, what a rogue and pleasant slave am I! Shakespeare.

To ROGUE, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To wander; to play the vagabond.

You rogue, here's lime in this sack too; there's nothing but rogue to be found in villainous man. Shakespeare.

Like the devil did tempt and sway 'em
To rogue, and then betray 'em. Hudibras.
The kid tussled out the rogue. Lyfange.

'Tis no scandal grown,
Or debt and rogue to quit the town. Dryden.
The rogue of alchemy,
And we the bubbled fools,
Spent all our present stock in hopes of golden sales. Swift.

5. Wagery; arch tricks.
ROGUESHIP, n. f. [from rogue.] The qualities or performance of a rogue.

Say, in what natty cellar under ground,
Or what church porch, your rogueship may be found? Dryden.

ROGUISM, adj. [from rogue.]

1. Vagrant; vagabond.
Though the persons, by whom it is used, be of better note than the former rogue; yet the fault is no less worthy of a marshall. Spenser.

2. Knavish; fraudulent.
He gets a thousand thumps and kicks,
Yet cannot leave his rogue tricks. Swift.

3. Waggish; wanton; slightly mischievous.
The most bewitching leer with her eyes, the most rogue cast; her cheeks are dimpled when she smiles, and her smiles would tempt an hermit. Dryden.

I am pleased to see my tenants pass away a whole evening in playing their innocent tricks; our friend Wimple is as merry as any of them, and there's a thousand rogue tricks on these occasions. Addison.

Thou'rt used to be playing rogue tricks; when his mistress's back was turned, he would roll out his tongue. Arbutnot.

ROGUISLY, adv. [from rogue.] Like a rogue; knavishly; wantonly.

ROGUISNESS, n. f. [from rogue.] The qualities of a rogue.

ROGUY, adj. [from rogue.] Knavish; wanton. A bad word.

A shepherd's boy had gotten a rogue trick of crying, A wolf, and tooling the country with false alarms. Lyfange.

To ROLL, v. n. [Of this word the To ROLL, v. n. most probable etymology is from ryler, flandrick, a violent man.]

To behave turbulently; to act at discretion; to be at free quarter; to bluster.

I have a rolling challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles on the Greeks,
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits. Shak.

Among a crew of rolling fellows,
He'd sit whole evenings at the alehouse. Swift.

ROLL, or ROLLER, n. f. [from the verb.] A turbulent, brutal, lawless, blustering fellow.

To ROLL, v. a. [rouler, Fr. rollen, Dutch; from rotula, of roto, Latin.]

1. To move any thing by volutation, or successive application of the different parts of the surface, to the ground.

Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre? Mark.

2. To move any thing round upon its axis.

3. To move in a circle.

8. To pour in a stream or waves.
A small Euphrates through the piece is roll'd,
And little eagles wave their wings in gold. Pope.

To ROLL, v. n.

1. To be moved by the successive application of all parts of the surface to a plane: as a cylinder.
Fire must roll the sky,
And wheel on the earth, devouring where it rolls. Milton.

Reports, like snow-balls, gather still the farther they roll. Government of the Tongue.
I'm pleas'd with my own work, Jove was not more.

With infant nature, when his spacious hand
Had rounded this huge ball of earth and seas,
To give it the first push, and see it roll
Along the vast abyss. Dryden.

2. To run on wheels.
He next essays to walk, but downward press'd,
On four feet imitates his brother beast;
By slow degrees he gathers from the ground
His legs, and to the rolling chair is bound. Dryden.

3. To perform a periodical revolution.
Thus the year rolls with itself again. Dryden.
When thirty rolling years have run their race. Druid.

4. To move with the surface variously directed.
Thou, light,
Revisit not these eyes, which roll in vain,
To find the piercing ray, and find no dawn. Milton.

A loar is chaf'd, his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eye-balls roll with living fire. Dryden.

5. To float in rough water.
Twice ten tempestuous nights I roll'd, resign'd
To roaring billows and the warring wind. Pope.

6. To move as waves or volumes of water.
Wave rolling after wave in torrent rapture
Our nation is too great to be ruined by any but itself; and if the number and weight of it roll one way upon the greatest changes that can happen, yet England will be safe. Temple.

Till the huge surge roll'd off, then backward sweep
The reluctant tides, and plunge into the deep. Pope.

Storms beat, and rolls the main;
Oh beat those storms, and roll the seas in vain! Pope.

7. To fluctuate; to move tumultuously.
Here tell me, if thou dar'st, my conscious soul,
What different sorrows did within thee roll. Prior.

The thoughts, which roll within my ravish'd breast,
To me, no fiercer, th' inspiring gods suggest. Pope.

In her sad breast the prince's fortunes roll,
And hope and doubt alternate seize her soul. Pope.

8. To revolve on an axis.
He fashion'd those harmonious spheres that roll
In restless gyres about the Arctic pole. Sandys.

9. To be moved with violence.

By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.

ROLL, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of rolling; the state of being rolled.

2. The thing rolling.

 Or polish 'em so far, as he rough-draw'd. Dryden.
TO ROUGHEN. v. a. [from rough] To make rough.
 Such difference there is in tongues, that the same figure, which roughens one, gives majesty to another, and that was it which Virgil studied in his verse. Dryden.
 Ah! where must needy poet seek for aid,
 When dust and ruin at once his countenance?
 In any coat, when dust contrail'd with rain,
 Pungent the nap, and leaves a mangled stain. Swift.

TO ROUGHEN. v. n. To grow rough.
 The broken lambskip.

ing of this cant word, unless it be contracted from ruffle.
How many princes that, in the ruff of all their glory, have been taken down from the head of a conquering army to the wheel of the victor's char-riot. 1. Filrange.
RUFFIAN. n. f. [ruffiano, Italian; ruffien, French, a bawd; ruffier, Danish, to pillage; perhaps it may be best derived from the old Teutonic word which we now write, rough.] A brutal, boisterous, mischievous fellow; a cut-throat; a robber; a murderer.
Have you a ruffian that will swear? drink? dance?
Revel the night? rob? murder? Shaksp.
Sir Ralph Vane's bold answers, termed rude and ruffian like, falling into years apt to take offence, further'd his condemnation. Hayward.

R U F

The boasted ancestors of these great men,
Whose virtues you admire, were all such ruffians;
This dread of nations, this almighty Rome,
That comprehends in her wide empire's bounds
All under heaven, was founded on a rape. Addison.
RUFFIAN. adj. Brutal; savagely boisterous.
Experience'd age
May timely intercept the ruffian rage;
Convene the tribes. Pope.
To RUFFIAN. v. n. [from the noun.] To rage; to raise tumults; to play the ruffian. Not in use.
A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath ruffian'd to upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise? Shaksp.
To RUFFLE. v. a. [ruffelen, Dutch, to wrinkle.]
1. To disorder; to put out of form; to make less smooth.
Naughty lady,
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accase thee; I'm your host;
With robbers hands, my hospitable favour
You should not ruffle thus. Shaksp.
In changeable taffetines, differing colours emerge and vanish upon the ruffling of the same piece of silk. Boyle.
As the first began to rise,
She smooth'd the ruffled lens, and clear'd the skies. Dryden.
Bear me, some god! oh quickly bear me hence
To wholesome solitude, the nurse of sense;
Where contemplation prunes her ruffled wings,
And the free soul sinks down to pity kings. Pope.
2. To discompose; to disturb; to put out of temper.
Were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Caesar, that should move
The bones of Rome to rise and mutiny. Shaksp.
We are transported by passions, and our minds ruffled by the disorders of the body; nor yet can we tell, how the soul should be affected by such kind of agitations. Glennville.
3. To put out of order; to surprise.
The knight found out
Th' advantage of the ground, where best
He might the ruffled foe meet. Mad-bras.
4. To throw disorderly together.
Within a thicket I repos'd, when round
I ruffled up tall leaves in heap, and found.
Let fall from heaven, a sleep into mine eye. Chapman.
5. To contract into pluts.
A small sort of fine ruffled linen, running along the upper part of the stays before, is called the modesty-piece. Addison.
To RUFFLE. v. n.
1. To grow rough or turbulent.
The night comes on, and the high winds
Do sorely ruffle; for many miles about There's scarce a bush. Shaksp.
The rising winds a ruffling gale afford. Dryden.
2. To be in loose motion; to flutter.
The fiery courier, when he hears from far
The sprightly trumpets and the shouts of war,
On his right shoulder his thick mane reclin'd,
Ruffles at speed, and dances in the wind. Dryden.
3. To be rough; to jar; to be in contention. Out of use.
A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;
One fit to bandy with thy Jewels sons,
To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome. Shaksp.
They would ruffle with jurors, and enforce them to find as they would direct. Bacon.
RUFFLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Plaited linen used as an ornament.
The tucker is a slip of fine linen, run in a small ruffle round the uppermost verge of the women's stays. Addison.
2. Disturbance; contention; tumult.
Conceive the mind's perception of some object,

Mangrels, spaniels, curs,
Shoughes, water rugs, and deny wolves, are cleped
Ally the name of dogs. Shaksp.
RUGGED. adj. [rugget, Swedish.]
1. Rough; full of unevenness and asperity.
Nature, like a weak and weary traveller,
Tir'd with a tedious and rugged way. Denham.
Since the earth revolves not upon a material and rugged, but a geometrical plane, their proportion may be varied in innumerable degrees. Bentley.
2. Not neat; not regular; uneven.
His hair is sticking;
His well-proportioned beard made rough and rugged,
Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodg'd. Shaksp.
3. Savage of temper; brutal; rough.
The greatest favours to such an one neither soften nor win upon him; neither melt nor embear him, but leave him as hard, rugged, and unconcerned as ever. Soult.
4. Stormy; rude; tumultuous; turbulent, tempestuous.
Now bind my brows with iron, and approach
The rugged hill that time and spite dare bring,
To frown upon th' entag'd Northumberland. Shaksp.
5. Rough or harsh to the ear.
Wit will thine

2. An instrument by which lines are drawn.

If your influence be quite dam'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long level'd rule of streaming light. Milton.

A judicious artist will use his eye, but he will trust only to his rule. South.

3. Canon; precept by which the thoughts or actions are directed.

He lay'd this rule before him, which proved of great use; never to trouble himself with the sight of future events. Fell.

This little treatise will furnish you with infallible rules of judging truly. Dryden.

Know it with an equal hand to hold the scale;
See't where the reasons pinch, and where they fail,
And where exceptions o'er the general rule prevail. Dryden.

We profess to have embraced a religion, which contains the most exact rules for the government of our lives. Tillotson.

We owe to christianity the discovery of the most certain and perfect rule of life. Tillotson.

A rule that relates even to the smallest part of our life, is of great benefit to us, in as much as it is a rule. Law.

RUM

4. Regularity; propriety of behaviour. Not in use.

Some say he's mad; others, that lessor hate him,
Do call it valiant fury; but for certain,
He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause
Within the belt of rule. Shakespeare.

To RULE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To govern; to control; to manage with power and authority.

It is a purpos'd thing
To curb the will of the nobility;
Smile't, and live with such as cannot rule.
Nor ever will be rul'd. Shakespeare.

Mary's et shall now be queen, and rule the king;
But I will rule both her, the king, and realm. Shakespeare.

A greater power now rul'd him.
Rome! 'tis thou alone with awful sway,
To rule mankind, and make the world obey,
Disposing peace and war thy own majestic way. Dryden.

2. To manage; to conduct.

He fought to take unto him the ruling of the affairs. Maccabees.

3. To settle as by a rule.

Had he done it with the pope's license, his adventures must have been silent; for that's a ruled rule with the schoolmen. Atterbury.

To RULE. v. n. To have power or command; with over.

Judah yet ruleth with God, and is faithful with the saints. Hofsa.

Thrice happy men! whom God hath thus advanced!
Created in his image, there to dwell,
And worship him; and in reward to rule
Over his works. Milton.

We subdue and rule over all other creatures; and as for our own behalf those qualities where-in they excel. Key.

He can have no divine right to my obedience, who cannot show his divine right to the power of ruling over me. Locke.

RULER. n. f. [from rule.]

1. Governour; one that has the supreme command.

Soon rulers grow proud, and in their pride foolish. Sidney.

God, by his eternal providence, has ordain'd kings; and the law of nature, leaders and rulers over others. Ridley.

The pompous mansion was design'd
To please the mighty rulers of mankind;
Inferior temples use on either hand. Addison.

They know how to draw a straight line between two points by the side of a ruler. Mason.

RUM. n. f.

1. A country parson. A cant word.

I'm grown a mere mopus; no company comes,
But a rabble of tenants and rusty dull rums. Swift.

2. A kind of spirit distilled from molasses.

I know not how derived. Rocmer in Dutch is a drinking glass.

To RUMBLE. v. n. [ronnecles, Dutch.] To make a hoarse, low, continued noise.

The trembling streams, which wont in channels clear
To rumble gently down with murmur soft,
And were by them right tuneful taught to bear
A base's part amongst their comforts off,
Now forc'd to overflow with brackish tears,
With troublous noise did dull their dainty ears. Spenser.

Rumble thy belly full; spit fire, spout rain;
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire are my daughters;
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness. Shakespeare.

At the rushing of his chariots, and at the rumbling of his wheels, the fathers shall not look back to their children for foebleness. Jeremiah.

RUM

Our courtier thinks that he's prais'd, when every man envies;
When love to rumbles in his pate, no sleep comes in his eyes. Suckling.
Apollo starts, and all Parnassus shakes
At the rude rumbling Barabision makes. Roscom.
The fire the sun'd, with greater fury burn'd, Rumling within. Dryden.
Th' included vapours, that in caverns dwell,
Labring with coheek pangs, and close confin'd,
In vain fought issue from the rumbling wind. Dryden.

On a sudden there was heard a most dreadful rumbling noise within the entrails of the machine, after which the mountain burst. Addison.
Several monarchs have acquainted me, how often they have been shook from their respective thrones, by the rumbling of a wheelbarrow. Spectator.

RUMBLER. n. f. [from rubble.] The person or thing that rumbles.

RUMINANT. adj. [from rumina, Fr. rumina, Lat.] Having the property of chewing the cud.

Ruminant creatures have a power of directing this peristaltic motion upwards and downwards.

The description, given of the muscular part of the gullet, is very exact in ruminants, but not in men. Dehaan.

TO RUMINATE. v. n. [ruminer; Fr. rumino, Lat.]

1. To chew the cud.
Others fill'd with pasture grazing fat,
Or bedward ruminating. Milton.

On grassy banks herds ruminating lie. Thomson.

2. To muse; to think again and again.
Alone sometimes the walk'd in secret, where
To ruminate upon her discontent. Swift.

Of unceasing prudence here he ruminates,
Of rising kingdoms, and of falling states. Waller.
I am at a solitude, an house between Hauptstadt and London, wherein Sir Charles Sedley died; this circumstance sets me a thinking and ruminating upon the employments in which men of wit exercise themselves. Steele.

He practises a slow meditation, and ruminates on the subject; and perhaps in two nights and days resolves those several ideas which are necessary. Watts.

TO RUMINATE. v. a. [rumino, Lat.]

1. To chew over again.

2. To muse on; to meditate over, and over again.

'Tis a studied, not a present thought,
By duty ruminate. Shakespeare.

The condemned English sit patiently, and musingly ruminate the morning's danger. Shakespeare.

Mad with desire she ruminates her sin,
And wishes all her wishes o'er again;
Now she despairs, and now resolves to try;
Would not, and would again, she knows not why. Dryden.

RUMINATION. n. f. [ruminatio, Lat. from ruminate.]

1. The property or act of chewing the cud.

Rumination is given to animals, to enable them at once to lay up a great store of food, and afterwards to chew it. Arbuthnot.

2. Meditation; reflection.

It is a melancholy of mine own, extracted from many objects, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness. Shakespeare.

RUN

1. To move swiftly; to ply the legs in such a manner as that both feet are at every step off the ground at the same time; to make haste; to pass with very quick pace.

Their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood. Proverbs.
Laban ran out unto the man unto the well. Genesis.

Since death's near, and runs with so much force,
We must meet first, and intercept his course. Dryden.

He ran up the ridges of the rocks again.

Let a boy clean your shoes and run of your shoes. Swift.

2. To use the legs in motion.
Seldom there is need of this, till young children can run about. Locke.

3. To move in a hurry.
The priest and people run about,
And at the ports all thronging out,
As if their safety were to quit
Their mother. Ben Jonson.

4. To pass on the surface, not through the air.

The Lord sent thunder, and the fire ran along upon the ground. Ezekiel.

5. To rush violently.

Let not thy voice be heard, lest angry fellows run upon thee, and thou lose thy life. Judges.

Now by the winds and raging waves I swear,
Your safety more than mine was thus my care;
Left of the guide bereft, the rudder lost,
Your ship should run against the rocky coast. Dryden.

They have avoided that rock, but run upon another no less dangerous. Burnet.

I discover those shoals of life, which are concealed in order to keep the unwary from running upon them. Addison.

6. To take a course at sea.

Running under the island Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat. Acts.

7. To contend in a race.

A horse-boy, being lighter than you, may be trusted to run races with less damage to the horse. Swift.

8. To flee; not to stand. It is often followed by away in this sense.

The difference between the valour of the Irish rebels and the Spaniards was, that the one ran away before they were charged, and the other straight after. Bacon.

I do not see a face
Worthy a man; that dares look up and stand
One thunder out; but downward all like beasts Running away at every flash. Ben Jonson.

The rest shivers'd run, some disguis'd,
To unknown coasts: some to the shores do fly. Daniel.

They, when they're out of hopes of flying,
Will run away from death by dying. Hudibras.

Your child shrieks, and runs away at a trot. Locke.

9. To go away by stealth.

My conscience will serve me to run from this Jew, my master. Shakespeare.

10. To emit or let flow any liquid.

My statues,
Like a fountain, with a hundred spouts,
Did run pure blood. Shakespeare.

I command, that the conduit run nothing but claret. Shakespeare.

In some houses, wainscots will sweat, so that they will almost run with water. Bacon.

Rivers run potable gold. Milton.

Caucasus roll'd a crimson flood,
And Thebes ran red with her own natives blood. Dryden.

The greatest vessel, when full, if you pour in still, it must run out some way, and the more it runs out at one side, the less it runs out at the other. Temple.

11. To stream; to flow; to have a current; not to stagnate.

RUN

Innumerable islands were oppressed with flowers, and interwoven with shining seas that run among hem.
Her fields he clouth'd, and cheer'd her blasted lace with running fountains and with springing grass.
Addison.

See dainties open, rivers run.
To be liquid; to be fluid.
In lead melted, when it beginneth to congeal, take a little hole, in which put quicksilver wrapped in a piece of linnen, and it will fix and run no more,
and endure the hammer.
Bacon.

Suit with eternal ice, and hid in snow,
he mountain stands; nor can the rising sun,
melt her frosts, and teach 'em how to run. Addison.
As wax dissolves, as ice begins to run,
and trickle into drops before the sun,
so melts the youth. Addison.

To be futile; to melt.
Her form glides through me, and my heart gives way.
his iron heart, which no impression took on wax, melts down, and runs, if the but look.
Dryden.

Suffer iron ores run freely in the fire. Woodward.
To fuse; to melt.
Your iron must not burn in the fire; that is, run or melt; for then it will be brittle. Mozon.

To pass; to proceed.
You, having run through so much publick business, have found out the secret to little known, that there is a time to give it over. Temple.
If there remains an eternity of sin after the short commission of time, we so faintly run over here, 'tis clear, that all the happiness, that can be imagined in this fleeting state, is not valuable in respect of the future. Locke.

To flow as periods or metre; to have a cadence; as, the lines run smoothly.
To go away; to vanish; to pass.
As fast as our time runs, we should be very glad in most parts of our lives that it ran much faster.
Addison.

To have a legal course; to be practised.
Customs run only upon our goods imported or exported, and that but once for all; whereas interit runs as well upon our ships as goods, and must be yearly paid. Child.

To have a course in any direction.
A bound runs counter, and yet draws dry foot well. Shakespeare.
Little is the wisdom, where the flight
So runs against all reason. Shakespeare.

That punishment follows not in this life the breach of this rule, and consequently has not the force of a law, in countries where the generally allowed practice runs counter to it, is evident. Locke.
Had the present war run against us, and all our attacks upon the enemy been vain, it might look like a degree of frenzy to be determined on so imperfect as an undertaking. Addison.

To pass in thought or speech.
Could you hear the signals of our fate;
Through such a train of woes if I should run,
The day would sooner than the tale be done.
Dryden.

By reading, a man antedates his life; and thus way of running up beyond one's nativity, is better than Plato's pre-existence. Collier.
Vigil, in his last Georgick, has run into a set of precepts foreign to his subject. Addison.
Raw and injudicious writers propose one thing for their subject, and run off to another. Felton.

To be mentioned cursorily, or in few words.
The whole runs on short, like articles in an account, whereas, if the subject were fully explained, each of them might take up half a page. Arbutnot.

To have a continual tenour of any kind.
Discourses run thus among the clearest observers:
it was said, that the prince, without any imaginable stain of his religion, had, by the sight of foreign courts, much corroborated his judgment. Watson.
The king's ordinary style runs, our sovereign lord the king. Sanderfon.

RUN

To be buffed upon.
His grisly beard blighted before sought,
And all on Lusus ran, his blasted thought. Dryden.
When we desire anything, our minds run wholly on the good circumstances of it: when 'tis obtained, our minds run wholly on the bad ones. Swift.

To be popularly known.
Men gave them their own names, by which they run a great while in Rome. Temple.
To have reception, success, or continuance; as, the pamphlet ran much among the lower people.

To go on by succession of parts.
She saw with joy the line immortal run.
Each fire impress'd, and glaring in his fun. Pope.
To proceed in a train of conduct.
You suspend your indignation against my brother, till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you should run a certain course.
Shakespeare.

To pass into some change.
It is really desirable, that there should be such a being in the world as takes care of the frame of it, that it do not run into confusion, and run mankind.
Wonder at my patience;
Have I not cause to rave, and bent my breath,
To read my heart with grief, and run distracted?
Addison.

To pass.
We have many evils to prevent, and much danger to run through. Taylor.
To proceed in a certain order.
Day yet wants much of his race to run. Milton.
This in a circle runs the peasant's pain,
And the year rolls within itself again. Dryden.
This church is very rich in relics, which run up as high as Daniel and Abraham. Addison.
Milk by boiling will change to yellow, and run through all the intermediate degrees, till it stops in an intense red. Arbutnot.

To be in force.
The owner hath incurred the forfeiture of eight years profits of his lands, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process that runneth against him.
Bacon.
The time of infancy shall not commence or run till after cessation of fact. Ayliffe.

To be generally received.
Neither was he ignorant what report ran of himself, and how he had lost the hearts of his subjects.
Knoles.
To be carried on in any manner.
Concessions, that run as high as any, the most charitable protestants make. Atterbury.
In popish countries the power of the clergy runs higher, and excommunication is more formidable.
Ayliffe.

To have a track or course.
Searching the ulcer with my probe, the fimsy run up above the office. Wife man.
One led me over those parts of the mines, where metalline veins run. Boyle.

To pass irregularly.
The planets do not of themselves move in curve lines, but are kept in them by some attractive force, which if once suspended, they would for ever run out in right lines. Chayne.

To make a gradual progress.
The wing'd colonies
There settling, lease the facets the blossoms yield,
And a low murmur runs along the field. Pope.

To be predominant.
This run in the head of a late writer of natural history, who is not wont to give the most lucky hits in the conduct of his thoughts. Woodward.

To tend in growth.
A man's nature runs either to herbs or weeds;
therefore let him seasonably water the one, and destroy the other. Bacon.

To grow exuberantly.
Joseph is a fruitful bough, whose branches run over the wall. Genesis.
Study your race, or the soil of your family will dwindle into dirt, or run into wits. Trotter.
If the richness of the ground cause turnips to run to leaves, treading down the leaves will help their rooting. Mortimer.

RUN

In fume, who have run up to men without a liberal education, many great qualities are dashed. Filion.
Magnanimity may run up to profusion or extravagance. Pope.

To exorn pus or matter.
Whether his flesh run with his issue, or be stopped, it is his uncleanness. Levinus.
To become irregular; to change to something wild.
Many have run out of their wits for women. Fildon.

Our King return'd,
The muse ran mad to see her exile'd lord;
On the crack'd stage the bestiam heroes roar'd.
Granville.

To go by artifice or fraud.
Hath publick faith, like a young heir,
For this taken up all sorts of ware,
And run in 'every tradesman's book,
Till both turn'd bankrupts?
Run in trust, and pay for it out of your wages.
Hudibras.
Swift.

To fall by haste, passion, or folly, into fault or misfortune.
It thou remember'st not the slightest folly,
That ever love did make thee run into;
Thou hast not lov'd. Shakespeare.
Polyman himself, in punishing the perjury of another, ran into wilful perjury himself, perverting the commendation of justice, which he had so much desired, by his most bloody and unjust sentence.
Knoles.

From not using it right, come all those mistakes
we run into in our endeavours after happiness.
Locke.

To fall; to pass; to make transition.
In the middle of a rainbow, the colours are sufficiently distinguished; but near the borders they run into one another, so that you hardly know how to limit the colours. Watts.

To have a general tendency.
Temperate climates run into moderate governments, and the extremes into despotic power.
Swift.

To proceed as on a ground or principle.
It is a confederating with him, to whom the sacrifice is offered; for upon that the apostle's argu-

To go on with violence.
Tyranny, running into all the methods of tyranny,
after a cruel reign was expelled. Swift.

To run after. To search for; to endeavour at, though out of the way.
The mind runs in the suggestion of any new notion,
runs after fancies, to make it the clearer to itself;
which, though it may be useful in explaining our thoughts to others, is no right method to settle true notions in ourselves. Locke.

To Run away with. To hurry without deliberation.
Thoughts will not be directed what objects to pursue, but run away with a man in pursuit of those ideas they have in view. Locke.

To Run in with. To close; to comply.
Though Thomas run in with the best reformers of learning, in his opposition to Aristotle; yet he has given us a plausible system. Baker.

To Run on. To be continued.
It, through our too much security, the same should run on, soon might we feel our state brought to those lamentable terms, whereof this hard and heavy sentence was by one of the ancients uttered.
Hooker.

To Run on. To continue the same course.
Running on with vain proximity. Drayton.
To Run over. To be so full as to overflow.
He fill his famish'd maw, his mouth runs o'er
With unchew'd morsels, while he churms the gorse.
Dryden.

54. To RUN over. To be so much as to overflow.

Milk while it boils, or wine while it works, run over the vessels they are in, and possess more place than when they were cool. Dryden.

55. To RUN over. To recount cursorily.

I shall run them over slightly, remarking chiefly what is obvious to the eye. Ray.

I shall not run over all the particulars, that would show what pains are used to corrupt children. Locke.

56. To RUN over. To consider cursorily.

These four every man should run over, before he executes the works he shall view. Wotton.

If we run over the other nations of Europe, we shall only pass through so many different scenes of poverty. Addison.

57. To RUN over. To run through.

Should a man run over the whole circle of earthly pleasures, he would be forced to complain that pleasure was not satisfaction. South.

58. To RUN out. To be at an end.

When a lease had run out, he stipulated with the tenant to resign up twenty acres, without lessening his rent, and no great abatement of the fine. Swift.

59. To RUN out. To spread exuberantly.

Infectious animals, for want of blood, run all out into legs. Hammond.

The seal of love runs out into suckers, like a fruitful tree. Taylor.

60. To RUN out. To expatiate.

Nor is it sufficient to run out into beautiful digressions, unless they are something of a piece with the main design of the Georgick. Addison.

On all occasions, she runs out extravagantly in praise of Hecus. Arbutnot.

A plant.

A rush hath a flower composed of many leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose; from the centre of which rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a fruit or husk, which is generally three-cornered, opening into three parts, and full of roundish seeds: they are planted with great care on the banks of the sea in Holland, in order to prevent the water from washing away the earth; for the roots of these rushes fasten themselves very deep in the ground, and mat themselves near the surface, so as to hold the earth closely together.
Milner.

He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes I am sure you are not prisoner.
Shakspere.

Man but a rush against Othello's breast,
And he retires.
Shakspere.

Shaksp.

Our summer such a ruffet lively wears,
As in a garment often dy'd appears.
Dryden.

2. Newton seems to use it for gray; but, if the etymology be regarded, improperly:
This white spot was immediately encompassed with a dark grey or ruffet, and that dark grey with the colours of the field mix. Newton's Opticks.

3. Charle; homelap; rustick. It is much used in descriptions of the manners and dresses of the country, I suppose, because it was formerly the colour of rustick dies: in some places, the rusticks still die cloths spun at home with bark, which must make them ruffet.
Tallate phrases, taken terms precise,
Figures pedantical: these summer flies
Have blown me full of maggot attention:
Henceforth my warring mind shall be express
In ruffet years, and honest kerly noes. Shakspere.

it is night. Pope.

To RUSTICATE, v. a. To banish into the country.

I was deeply in love with a milliner, upon which I was sent away, or, in the university phrase, ruficated for ever. Speelman.

RUSTICITY, n. f. [ruficité, Fr. ruficitas, from ruficus, Lat.]

1. Qualities of one that lives in the country; simplicity; artlessness; rudeness; savageness.

There presented himself a tall, clownish, young man, who falling before the queen of the houses, desired that he might have the achievement of any adventure, which, during the feast, might happen; that being granted, he rested him on the floor, and sat for a better place by his ruficity. Spenser.

R U T

The sweetness and ruficity of a pastoral cannot be so well express'd in any other tongue as in the Greek, when rightly mixt with the Doric dialect. Addison.

This is general expence of their time would curtail the ordinary means of knowledge, as 'twould shorten the opportunities of vice; and so accordingly an universal ruficity presently took place, and stopped not till it had over-run the whole stock of mankind. Woodward.

2. Rural appearance.

RUSTICK, adj. [ruficus, Latin; rufique, French.]

1. Rural; country.

By Lichas willing, nothing was the odds of the Iberian side, and continued to in the next by the excellent running of a knight, though fostered to by the mules, as many times the very rufick people left both their delights and profits to hearken to his songs. Sidney.

An ignorant clown cannot learn the language of a courtly behaviour, when his rufick has grown up with him till the ages of forty. Watts.

3. Brutal; savage.

My foul rebel'd I should find the bow'r
Of some fell monster fierce with barbarous pow'r;
Some rufick wretch, who liv'd in heav'n's de-spight, Pope.

Containing laws, and trampling on the right.

4. Artless; honest; simple.

5. Plain; undorned.

An altar front, rufick, of grassy ford. Milton.
With ancient smooth the pole liv'd in able throne,
Where ancient Nereus sat, a rufick throne. Pope.

RUSTICK, n. f. A clown; a swain; an inhabitant of the country.

As nothing is so rude and insolent as a wealthy rufick, all this his kindness is overlooked, and his person most unworthily ruled at. South.

RUSTINESS, n. f. [from rufy.] The state of being rusty.

To RUSTLE, v. n. [Anglican, Saxon.] To make a low continued rattling; to make a quick succession of small noises.

He is coming; I hear the ruffle. Shakespeare.

The ground hereof, was the observation of the part in deer after immoderate venery, and about the end of their rut. Bacon.

2. [route, Fr.] The track of a cart wheel.

From hills seine waters heading fall,
That always eat huge ruts, which, met in one bed
fill a vall
With such a confluence of streames, that on the mountaine grounds

Farre off, in lighted shepherds eares the bustling note rebounds. Chapman.

RUTH, n. f. [from rue.]

1. Mercy; pity; tenderness; sorrow for the misery of another. Out of use.

O wretch of guests, said he, thy tale hath fir'd
My mind to much ruth. Chapman.
All ruth, compassion mercy he forgot. Farley.
She fair, he full of baseness and truth
Lov'd much, lov'd little, and did fire night;
He durst not speak, by suit to purchase ruth. Farley.

The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chosen thou hast; and they that overcome,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth. Milton.

2. Misery; sorrow.

The Britons, by Maximilian led way
With wretched miseries and woful ruth,
Were to those pagans made an open prey. Spenser.

RUTHFUL, adj. [ruth and full.] Ruthful; woful; sorrowful.

The misadventures seldom take a ruthful and renewing experience of those harms, which misadventures carry with them. Curea.

RUTHFULLY, adv. [from ruthful.]

1. Wofully; sadly.

The flower of hope and foot, lost by the regions of the enemy, ruthfully perished. Shakespeare.

2. Sorrowfully; mournfully.

Help me, ye baneful lords, whose striking sound
Is sign of dreary death, my deadly cries
Melt ruthfully in tune. Spenser.

3. Wofully. In irony.

By this Meneva's friend bereft Oleades of that rich bowl, and left his lips, wife, eyes

Ruthfully incur'd. Chapman.

RUTHLESS, adj. [from ruth.] Cruel; pitiless; uncompassionate; barbarous.

What is Edward but a ruthless foe?
What Clarence but a quickland of deceit? Shakespeare.

The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet;
And when I start, the cruel people laugh. Shakespeare.

His archers circle me; my reins they wound,
And ruthless fled my gull upon the ground. Spenser.
Their rage the hostile bands restrain,
All but the ruthless monarch of the main. Pope.

RUTHLESSLY, adv. [from ruthless.] Without pity; cruelly; barbarously.

RUTHLESSNESS, n. f. [from ruthless.] Want of pity.

RUTIER, n. f. [route, Fr.] A direction of the road or course at sea.

RUTISH, adj. [from rut.] Wanton; libidinous; salacious; lustful; lecherous.

That is an advancement to one Diana, to take heed of the admittance of count Rosillon, a foolish idle boy; but for all that very rutish. Shakespeare.

RYE, n. f. [ryge, Saxon.]

1. A coarse kind of bread corn.

Between the acres of the rye,
These pretty country folks would lie. Shakespeare.

S Has in English the same hissing sound as in other languages, and unhappily prevails in so many of our words that it produces in the ear of a foreigner a continued sibilation. In the beginning of words it has invariably its natural and genuine sound: in the middle it is sometimes uttered with a stronger appulse of the tongue to the palate, like z, as rose, reflate, rosy, offer, nozel, resident, busy, business. It sometimes keeps its natural sound; as loose, designation; for which I know not whether any rules can be given. In the end of monosyllables it is sometimes s, as in this; and sometimes z, as in as, has; and generally where es stands, in verbs for eth, as gives. It seems to be established as a rule, that no noun singular should end with /single: therefore in words written with diphthongs, and naturally long, an e is nevertheless added at the end, as goose, house; and where the syllable is short the f is doubled, and was once ff, as aff, anciently affe; wilderness, anciently wilderneffe; distress, anciently distreffe.

SAB'OTH. n. f. [Hebrew.] Signifying an army.

Holy Lord God of sabbath; that is, Lord of holiness. Common Prayer.

SABBATH. n. f. [An Hebrew word signifying rest; sabbat, Fr. sabbatum, Lat.]

1. A day appointed by God among the Jews, and from them established among Christians for publick worship; the seventh day set apart from works of labour to be employed in piety.

I purpose,
And by our holy sabbath have I sworn,
To have the due and forfeit of my bond. Shaksp.
Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light,
Free sabbath ev'ning. Milton.

Here ev'ry day was sabbath: only free
From hours of pray'r, for hours of charity,
Such as the Jews from servile toil release,
Where works of mercy were a part of rest:
Such as blest angels exercise above,
Vary'd with sacred hymns and acts of love;
Such sabbaths as that one she now enjoys;
E'en that perpetual one, which she employs:
For such vicissitudes in heav'n there are,
In praise alternate, and alternate pray'r. Dryden.

2. Intermission of pain or sorrow; time of rest.

Never any sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.
Nor can his blest soul look down from heav'n,
Or break the eternal sabbath of his rest,
To see her miseries on earth. Dryden.

Peaceful sleep out the sabbath of the tomb,
And wake to raptures in a life to come. Pope.

SABBATHARIAN. n. f. [from sabbath.]

One who observes the sabbath with unreasonable rigour; one who observes the seventh day of the week in opposition to the first.

SABBATHBREAKER. n. f. [sabbath and break.] Violator of the sabbath by labour or wickedness.

VOL. II.

S A C

The usurer is the greatest sabbathbreaker, because his plough goeth every Sunday. Bacon.

SABBATICAL. adj. [sabbaticus, Lat. sabbaticus, Fr. from sabbath.] Resembling the sabbath; enjoying or bringing intermission of labour.

The appointment and observance of the sabbatical year, and after the seventh sabbatical year, a year of jubilee, is a circumstance of great moment. Forbes.

SABBATISM. n. f. [from sabbatum, Lat.]

Observance of the sabbath superstitiously rigid.

SABINE. n. f. [sabine, Fr. sabina, Lat.]

A plant.

Sabine or fuvin will make fine hedges, and may be brought into any form by clipping, much beyond trees. Mortimer.

SABLE. n. f. [zibella, Lat.] Fur.

Sable is worn of great personages, and brought out of Russia, being the fur of a little head of that name, esteemed for the perfectness of the colour of the hairs, which are very black. Hence sable, in heraldry, signifies the black colour in gentlemen's arms. Peacocks.

Furiously running in upon him, with tumultuous speech, he violently sought from his head his rich cap of sables. Knolles.

The peacock's plumes his tuck must not fail,
Nor the dear purchase of the sable's tail. Gay.

SABLE. adj. [Fr.] Black. A word used by heralds and poets.

By this the drooping daylight began to fade,
And yield his room to fast succeeding night,
Who with her sable mantle gan to shade,
The face of earth, and ways of living light. Fairy Queen.

With him inthron'd

Sat sable vested night, eldest of things,

The comfort of his reign. Milton.

They soon begin that tragick play,
And with their smoky canous banish day:

Night, horror, slaughter, with confusion meet,
And in their sable arms embrace the fleet. Waller.

Adorning first the genius of the place,

And night, and all the stars that gild her sable throne. Dryden.

SABLIERE. n. f. [Fr.]

1. A sand-pit.

2. [In carpentry.] A piece of timber as long, but not so thick, as a beam. Bailey.

SABRE. n. f. [sabre, Fr. I suppose, of Turkish original.] A cimeter; a short sword with a convex edge; a falchion.

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms;

Keen be my sabre, and of proof my arms;

I ask no other blessing of my stars,
No prize but fame, no mistress but the wars. Dryden.

Seam'd o'er with wounds, which his own sabre gave,

In the vile habit of a village slave,
The foe deceiv'd. Pope.

SABULOSITY. n. f. [from fabulosus.] Grittiness; sandiness.

SABULOUS. adj. [fabulum, Latin.]

Gritty; sandy.

SACCADE. n. f. [Fr.] A violent check the rider gives his horse, by drawing both the reins very suddenly: a correction used when the horse bears heavy on the hand. Bailey.

SACCHARINE. adj. [saccharum, Latin.]

Having the taste, or any other of the chief qualities of sugar.

Manna is an essential saccharine salt, sweetening from the leaves of most plants. Arbutnot.

SACERDOTAL. adj. [sacerdotalis, Latin.]

Priestly; belonging to the priesthood.

They have several offices and prayers, especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingfleet.

He fell violently upon me, without respect to my sacerdotal orders. Dryden.

If ample powers, granted by the rulers of this world, add dignity to the persons intrusted with their powers, behold the importance and extent of the sacerdotal commission. Atterbury.

SACHEL. n. f. [sacculus, Lat.] A small sack or bag.

SACK. n. f. [Hebrew; סַכּוּס; sacus, Lat. saccus, sax.] It is observable of this word, that it is found in all languages, and it is therefore conceived to be antediluvian.]

1. A bag; a pouch; commonly a large bag.

Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city.

And we be lords and rulers over Even Shalyspeare.

Vastus cauted the authors of that mutiny to be thrust into sacks, and in the sight of the fleet cast into the sea. Knolles.

2. The measure of three bushels.

3. A woman's loose robe.

To SACK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in bags.

Now the great work is done, the corn is ground,

The grist is sack'd, and every sack well bottom. Hatterton.

2. [from sacar, Spanish.] To take by storm; to pillage; to plunder.

Edward Bruce spoiled all the old English pale inhabitants, and sack'd and rased all cities and corporate towns. Spencer.

I'll make thee stoop and bend thy knee,
Or sack this country with a mutiny. Shakspere.

What armies conquer'd, perish'd with thy sword,
What comes sack'd? Fairfax.

Who sees these dismal heaps, but would demand
What barbarous invader sack'd the land? Dunham.

The pope himself was ever after unfortunate,
Rome being twice taken and sack'd in his reign. South.

The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is the bed of the Tiber: when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sack'd by a barbarous enemy, they would take care to bestow such of their riches this way as could best bear the water. Addison.

SACK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Storm of a town; pillage; plunder.

If Saturn's ion bellows

The sack of Troy, which he by promise owes,
Then shall the conqu'ring Greeks thy loss restore. Dryden.

2. A kind of sweet wine, now brought chiefly from the Canaries. [See. Fr. of uncertain etymology; but derived by Skinner, after Mandisio, from Sagor, a city of Morocco. The sack of Shalyspeare is believed to be what is now called sherry.]

Please you drink a cup of sack. Shakspere.

The butler hath great advantage to allure the molds with a glass of sack. Swift.
SACKBUT. n. f. [sacabute, Spanish; sambuca, Lat. sambucus, Fr.] A kind of pipe.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and flute,
Make the fun dance. Shakespeare.

SACKCLOTH. n. f. [sack and cloth.] Cloth of which sacks are made; coarse cloth sometimes worn in mortification.

Coarse stuff made of goat's hair, of a dark colour, worn by soldiers and mariners; and used as a habit among the Hebrews in times of mourning.
Called sackcloth, either because sacks were made of this sort of stuff, or because hair-cloths were strait and close like a sack. Cainet.

To augment her painful penance more,
Thrice every week in ashes she did sit,
And next her wrinkled skin rough sackcloth wore.
Spenser.

Thus with sackcloth I invest my woe,
And dust upon my clouded forehead throw. Sandys.
Being clad in sackcloth, he was to lie on the ground, and constantly day and night to implore
God's mercy for the sin he had committed. Ayliffe.

SACKER. n. f. [from sack.] One that takes a town.

SACKFUL. n. f. [sack and full.] A full bag.

Wound goes about with sackfuls of drofs, odiously misrepresenting his prince's countenance. Swift.

SACKPOSET. n. f. [sack and posset.] A posset made of milk, sack, and some other ingredients.

Snuff the candles at supper on the table, because the burning snuff may fall into a dish of soup or sackposset. Swift.

SACRAMENT. n. f. [sacrement, Fr.
sacramentum, Lat.]

1. An oath; any ceremony producing an obligation.

2. An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace.

As often as we mention a sacrament, it is improperly understood; for in the writings of the ancient fathers all articles which are peculiar to christian faith, all duties of religion containing that which sense or natural reason cannot of itself discern, are most commonly named sacraments; our restraint of the word to some few principal divine ceremonies, importeth in every such ceremony two things, the substance of the ceremony itself, which is visible; and besides that, somewhat else more secret, in reference whereunto we conceive that ceremony to be a sacrament. Hooker.

3. The eucharist; the holy communion.
Ten thousand French have taken the sacrament
To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no christian soul but English Talbot. Shakespeare.

As we have taken the sacrament,
We will unite the white rose with the red. Shakespeare.

Before the famous battle of Cressy, he spent the greatest part of the night in prayer; and in the morning received the sacrament, with his son, and the chief of his officers. Addison.

SACRAMENTAL. adj. [sacramental, Fr. from sacrament.] Constituting a sacra- ment; pertaining to a sacrament.

To make complete the outward substance of a sacrament, there is required an outward form, which form sacramental elements receive from sacramental words. Hooker.

The words of St. Paul are plain; and whatever interpretation can be put upon them, it can only vary the way of the sacramental efficacy, but it cannot evacuate the blessing. Taylor.

SACRAMENTALLY. adv. [from sacramen- tal.] After the manner of a sacrament.

My body is sacramentally contained in this sacra- ment of bread. Hall.

The law of circumcison was meant by God sacramentally to impress the duty of strict purity. Hammond.

SACRED. adj. [sacra, Fr. sacer, Lat.]

1. Immediately relating to God.

Wolves shall succeed for teachers, grievous wolves;
Who all the sacred mysteries of heav'n
To their own vile advantages shall turn. Milton.
Before me lay the sacred test,
The help, the guide, the balm of souls perplex'd. Arbutnot.

2. Devoted to religious uses; holy.

Those who came to celebrate the sabbath, made a conscience of helping themselves for the honour of that most sacred day. Maccabers.
They with wine-off'rings pour'd, and sacred feast
Shall spend their days with joy unblam'd. Milton.
This temple, and his holy ark,
With all his sacred things. Milton.

3. Dedicated; consecrate; consecrated:
with to.

O'er its eastern gate was rais'd above
A temple, sacred to the queen of love. Dryden.

4. Relating to religion; theological.

Suit with the love of sacred song. Milton.

5. Entitled to reverence; awfully venerable.

Bright officious lamps,
In thee concentrating all their precious beams
Of sacred influence. Milton.
Poet and saint, to thee alone were giv'n,
The two most sacred names of earth and heav'n. Cowley.

6. Inviolable, as if appropriated to some superior being.

The honour's sacred, which he talks on now,
Supposing that I lack it. Shakespeare.
How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance? how to violate
The sacred fruit? Milton.
Secrets of marriage still are sacred held;
There sweet and bitter by the wine conceal'd. Dryden.

SACREDLY. adv. [from sacred.] Inviolably; religiously.

When God had manifested himself in the flesh;
how sacredly did he preserve this privilege? South.
SACREDNESS. n. f. [from sacred.] The state of being sacred; state of being consecrated to religious uses; holiness;
sanctity.

In the sanctuary the cloud, and the oracular answers, were prerogatives peculiar to the ju-nity of the place. South.

This minims the inferiety of power, let the administration of it be what it will. Lightfoot.

SACRIFIC. adj. [sacrificus, Lat.] Employed in sacrifice.

SACRIFICABLE. adj. [from sacrificor, Lat.] Capable of being offered in sacri- fice.

Although Jephtha's vow ran generally for two words, whatsoever shall come forth; yet might it be restrained in the sense, that whatsoever was sacri- ficable, and justly subject to lay fall immolation, and so would not have sacrificed either horse or dog. Brown.

SACRIFICATOR. n. f. [sacrificator, Fr.
from sacrificor, Lat.] Sacrificer; offerer of sacrifice.

Not only the subject of sacrifice is questionable, but also the sacrificator, which the picture makes to be Jephtha. Brown.

SACRIFICATORY. adj. [from sacrificor, Lat.] Offering sacrifice.

To SACRIFICE. v. a. [sacrifier, Fr.
sacrifico, Lat.]

1. To offer to heaven; to immolate as an atonement or propitiation; with to.

Alarbus' limbs are lapt,
And intrails lead the sacrificing fire. Shakespeare.
This blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries
To thee for justice. Shakespeare.

I sacrifice to the Lord all that openeth the trick, being males. Isaiah.

Men from the herd or flock
Of sacrificing bullock, lamb, or kid. Milton.

2. To destroy or give up for the sake of something else; with to.

'Tis a sad contemplation, that we should sacrifice
the peace of the church to a little vain curiosity. Deray of Fery.

The breach of this rule, To do as one would be done to, would be contrary to that interest sacri- fice to when they break it. Lack.

Syphax loves you, and would sacrifice
His life, nay more, his honour, to your service. Addison.

A great genius sometimes sacrifices sound to sense. Brown.

3. To destroy; to kill.

4. To devote with loss.

Condemn'd to sacrifice his childish years
To babbling ignorance, and to empty fears. Prior.

To SACRIFICE. v. n. To make offerings;
to offer sacrifice.

He that sacrificeth of things wrongfully gotten,
his offering is ridiculous. Ecclijasticus.

Let us go to sacrifice to the Lord.
Some mischief is befallen
To that mock man who well had sacrific'd. Milton.

SACRIFICE. n. f. [sacrifice, Fr. sacrifici- cium, Lat.]

1. The act of offering to heaven.

God will ordain religious rites
Of sacrifice. Milton.

2. The thing offered to heaven, or immolated by an act of religion.

Upon such sacrifice
The gods themselves throw incense. Shakespeare.
Go with me like good angels to my end,
And as the long divorces of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heav'n. Shakespeare.

Moloch be near'd with blood
Of human sacrifice. Milton.

My life it thou prefer'st, my life
Thy sacrifice shall be;

And I death, if death must be my doom,
Shall join my soul to thee. Spea'der.

3. Any thing destroyed, or quitted for the sake of something else; as, he made a sacrifice of his friendship to his interest.

4. Any thing destroyed.

SACRIFICER. n. f. [from sacrifice.] One who offers sacrifice; one that immolates.

Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers. Shakespeare.

When some brawny sacrificer knocks,
Before an altar led, an offer'd ox. Dryden.

A prick pours wine between the horns of a bull;
the practice is veiled after the manner of the old Roman sacrificers. Addison.

SACRIFICIAL. adj. [from sacrifice.] Performing sacrifice; included in sacrifice.

Ran sacrificial whisp'rings in his ear,
Make sacred even his thurrop. Shakespeare.

Tertullian's observation upon these sacrificial rites, is pertinent to this rule. Taylor.

SACRILEGE. n. f. [sacrilege, French;
sacrilegium, Latin.] The crime of appropriating to himself what is devoted to religion; the crime of robbing heaven;
the crime of violating or profaning things sacred.

By what eclipse shall that sun be defec'd,
What mine bath erst thrown down so far a tower!
What sacrilege hath such a saint disgrac'd? Shakespeare.

Then 'gan a cur'd hand the quiet womb
Of his great grandmother with steel to wound,
And the hid treasures in her sacred tomb
With sacrilege to dig. Fairy Queen.

We need not go many ages back to see the vengeance of God upon some families, raised upon the ruins of churches, and enriched with the spoils of sacrilege. South.

SACRILEGIOUS. adj. [sacrilegus, Latin; from sacrilege.] Violating things sacred; polluted with the crime of sacrilege.

To sacrilegious perjury should I be betrayed, I would account it greater misery. King Charles.

A sconce that hung on high, Dryden.

Whit'ners fill'd to light the sacristy.

A third apartment should be a kind of sacristy for altars, idols, and sacrificing instruments. Addison.

SAD. adj. [Of this word, so frequent in the language, the etymology is not known. It is probably a contraction of sadged, heavy, burdened, overwhelmed,

from To jing, to load.]

1. Sorrowful; full of grief.

Do you think I shall not love a sad Pamela so well as a joyful? Sidney.

One from sad dismay

Recomforted, and after thoughts disturb'd,

Submitting to what seem'd remediless. Milton.

The hapless pair

Set in their sad discourse and various plaint. Milton.

and shadow of blue; and in its coarse pieces is of a sadder hue than the powder of Venice glass. Brown.

I met him accidentally in London in sad coloured clothes, far from being costly. Walton.

Scarce any tinging ingredient is of so general use as wood, or glauca; for though of itself it dye but a blue, yet it is used to prepare cloth for green, and many of the sadder colours when the dyes

make them last without fading. Boyle.

Wood or woad is used by the dyers to lay the foundation of all sad colours. Mortimer.

8. Heavy; weighty; ponderous.

With that his hand, more sad than lump of lead,

Uplifting high, he wrenched with Morddure,

His own good sword, Morddure, to cleave his head.

Fairy Queen.

9. Cohesive; not light; firm; close.

Chalky lands are naturally cold and sad, and therefore require warm applications and light compost. Mortimer.

TO SADDEN. v. a. [from sad.]

1. To make sad; to make sorrowful.

2. To make melancholy; to make gloomy.

Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,

Shades ev'ry flower, and darkens ev'ry green;

Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,

And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.

3. To make dark coloured.

4. To make heavy; to make cohesive.

Mail is binding, and saddening of land is the great prejudice it doth to clay lands. Mortimer.

SADDLE. n. f. [sabl, Saxon; sadel,

Dutch.] The seat which is put upon the horse for the accommodation of the rider.

His horse hipped, with an old moth-eaten saddle,

and the stirrups of no kindred. Shakespeare.

The law made for apparel, and riding in saddles,

after the English fashion, is penal only to Englishmen. Davies.

One hung a pole-ax at his saddle bow,

And one a heavy mace. Dryden.

The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown;

But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own. Dryden.

TO SADDLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a saddle.

I will saddle me an ass, that I may ride thereon.

2 Samuel.

Rebels, by yielding, do like him, or worse,

Who saddled his own back to shame his horse.

Cleaveland.

No man, sure, e'er left his house,

And saddled Ball, with thoughts to wild,

To bring a midwife to his house,

Before he knew she was with child. Prior.

2. To load; to burden.

Resolv'd for sea, the slaves thy baggage pack,

Each saddled with his burden on his back;

Nothing retards thy voyage. Dryden.

SADDLEBACKED. adj. [saddle and back.]

Horses, saddlebacked, have their backs low, and a raised head and neck. Farrier's Dictionary.

SADDLEMAKER. } n. f. [from saddle.]

SADDLER. } One whose trade is to make saddles.

Spence that I had

To pay the saddler for my mistress's ruyter.

The saddler had it. Shakespeare.

The utmost exactness in these belongs to saddlers,

saddlers, and smiths. Digby.

The fifth and the saddler's journeyman ought to partake of your master's generosity. Swift.

SADLY. adv. [from sad.]

1. Sorrowfully; mournfully.

My father is gone wild into his grave;

For in his tomb lie my affections;

And with his spirit sadly I survive,

To mock the expectations of the world. Shakespeare.

He griev'd, he wept, the light an image brought

Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought.

Dryden.

He sadly suffers in their grief,

Out-weeping an hermit, and out prays a saint. Dryden.

2. Calamitously; miserably.

We may at present easily live, and one day sadly feel. South.

SADNESS. n. f. [from sad.]

1. Sorrowfulness; mournfulness; dejection of mind.

The soul receives intelligence

By her near genius of the body's end,

And so imparts a sadness to the sense. Daniel.

And let us not be wanting to ourselves,

Left to severe and obstinate sadness

Tempt a new vengeance. Denham.

A pathos regret sadness, a grief and sadness of its memory, enter into God's roll of mourners.

Decay of Piety.

SAFE. adj. [sauv, French; salvus, Lat.]

1. Free from danger.

Our separated fortune

Shall keep us both the safe; where we are,

There's daggers in men's smiles. Shakespeare.

But Trivia kept in secret shades alone,

Her care, Hippolytus, to fate unknown;

And call'd him Verulus in the Egerian grove,

Where then he liv'd obscure, but safe from Jove's

Wrath. Dryden.

2. Free from hurt.

Put your head into the mouth of a wolf, and when you've brought it out safe and sound, talk of a reward. L'Estrange.

3. Conferring security.

To write the same things to you, to me is not grievous, but to you safe. Philippians.

Afraid; I follow thee, safe guide, the path

Thou lead'st me. Milton.

Beyond the beating surge his course he bore,

With longing eyes observing, to survey

Some smooth ascent, on safe frequented bay. Pope.

4. No longer dangerous; repositd out of the power of doing harm. This is rather a ludicrous meaning.

Banquo's safe.

—Ay, my good lord; safe in a ditch: he lies

With twenty trenched gashes on his head,

The least a death to nature. Shakespeare.

Our great forbidding safe, with all his spirit

About him. Milton.

SAFE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A hut-tery; a pantry. Ainsworth.

SAFECONDUCT. n. f. [sauconduct, Fr.]

SAFEGUARD. n. f. [safe and guard.]

1. Defence; protection; security.

We serve the living God as near as our wits can reach to the knowledge thereof even according to his own will; and do therefore trust, that his mercy shall be our safe guard. Hobbes.

If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors.

Shakespeare.

As far, where dangers threatened on the one side, and the opinion that there should be in him little safeguard for his friends on the other, chose rather to venture upon extremities than to be thought a weak protector.

Palgrave.

Great numbers, defended from them, have, by the blessing of God upon their industry, raised themselves to high in the world as to become, in times of difficulty, a protection and a safeguard to that altar, at which their ancestors ministered.

Atterbury.

Thy sword, the safeguard of thy brother's throne,
Is now become the bulwark of thy own.

Granville.

2. Convey; guard through any interdicted road, granted by the possessor.

3. Pass; warrant, to pass.

Shakespeare.

On safeguard he came to me.
A trumpet was sent to the earl of Essex for a safeguard or pass to two lords, to deliver a message from the king to the two houses.

Clarendon.

To SAFEGUARD, v. n. [from the noun.]

To guard; to protect.

We have locks to safeguard necessities,

And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.

Shakespeare.

SAFELY, adv. [from safe.]

1. In a safe manner; without danger.

Who a there that hath the leisure and means to call to all the parts, concerning most of the oportunities he has, to us safely to conclude that he hath a clear and full view?

Locke.

All keep aloof, and safely shout around;
But none pretences to give a nearer wound.

Dryden.

2. Without hurt.

God safely quit her of her burden, and with gentle travel, to the gladdening of your highness with an heir.

Shakespeare.

SAFENESS, n. f. [from safe.] Exemption from danger.

It is a man should forbear his food or his business, till he had certainty of the safeness of what he was going about, he must survive and the disputing.

South.

SAFETY, n. f. [from safe.]

Shakespeare.

SAFFLOW, n. f. A plant.

An herb they call safflow, or buliard saffron, dyes
vio for scarlet.

Mortimer.

SAFFRON, n. f. [saffran, French; from saphor, Arabic. It was yellow, according to Davies in his Welsh dictionary.

Miller.

Crocus, Latin.] A plant.
Grind your bole and chalk, and five or six shives of saffron.

Peacham.

SAFFRON, Basard, n. f. [carthamus, Lat.]
A plant.

This plant agrees with the thistle in most of its characters; but the seeds of it are destitute of down.
It is cultivated in Germany for dyes. It spreads into many branches, each producing a flower, which, when fully blown, is pulled off, and dried, and it is the part the dyes use.

Miller.

SAFFRON, adj. Yellow; having the colour
of saffron.

Are these your customers?

Did this companion, with the saffron face,
Revel and feast it at my house to-day,
Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut?

Shakespeare.

Soon as the white and red mixt finger'd dame
Had gilt the mountains with her saffron flames,
I sent my men to Circé's house.

Chapman.

Now when the rosy morn began to rise,
And wad her saffron streamer through the skies.

Dryden.

To SAG, v. n. To hang heavy.

The mind I lay by, and the heart I bear,
Shall never jog with doubt, nor shake with fear.

SAGACITY, n. f. [sagacité, French;
sagacitas, Latin.]

1. Quickness of scent.

2. Acuteness of discovery.

It requires too great a sagacity for vulgar minds to draw the line nicely between virtue and vice.

South.

Sagacity leads out the intermediate ideas, to discover what connection there is in each link of the chain, whereby the extremes are held together.

Locke.

Many were eminent in former ages for their discovery of it; but though the knowledge they have left be worth our study, yet they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after-ages.

Locke.

SAGAMORE, n. f.

in medicine.

SAGE, n. f. [sauge, French; salvia, Lat.]

A plant of which the school of Salernum thought to highly, that they left this verse:

Cur moritur homo cui salvia crescit in hortu?

By the cool air, figure, taste, and smell, we have a clear idea of sage and hemlock, as we have of a cure.

Locke.

Muddled with sage the hard'ning cheese she press'd Gau.

SAGE, adj. [sage, French; saggio, Ital.]

Wise; grave; prudent.

In sages to rest.

O matron sage, go with me, I rather came.

F. Queen.

Value, young in years, but in sage councils old,
Than whom a better senator never held

The helm of Rome.

Milton.

Can you expect that she should be so sage
To rule her blood, and you not rule your rage?

Waller.

SAGE, n. f. [from the adjective.] A philosopher; a man of gravity and wisdom.

Though you profess
Yourself such sages; yet know I no less,

Sandys.

Nor am to you inferior.
At his birth a star proclaims him come,
And guides the eastern sages, who enquire

Milton.

His place, to offer incense, myrrh, and gold.
For to the holy sages once did sing.

That he our deadly forfeit should release,
And with his father work as a perpetual peace.

Milt.

Groves, where immortal sages taught,
Where heav'nly visions Plato fix'd.

Pope.

SAFELY, adv. [from sage.] Wisely;
prudently.

Dutch.]

1. The expanded sheet which catches the wind, and carries on the vessel on the water.

He came too late; the ship was under sail.

They loosed the rudder bands, and hoist'd up the main-sail to the wind.

The gully horn from view by rising gales,
She follow'd with her light and flying sails.

2. [In poetry.] Wings.

He cutting way
With his broad sails, about him soared round;

At last, low slooping with unwieldy sway,
Snatch'd up both horse and man.

3. A ship; a vessel.

A sail arriv'd
From Pompey's son, who through the realms of Spain

Calls out for vengeance on his father's death.

4. Sail is a collective word, noting the number of ships.

So by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armada of collected sail

Is scatter'd.

It is written of Edgar, that he increas'd the sails
he found two thousand six hundred sails.

A feigned tear destroys us, against whom Tydides nor Achill's could prevail,

Nor ten years conflict, nor a thousand sail D-don.

He had promised to his army, who were disconraged at the sight of Seleucus's fleet, consisting of an hundred sail, that at the end of the summer they should see a fleet of his of five hundred sail.

5. To strike SAIL. To lower the sail.

When sailing was now dangerous, Paul admonished them.

3. To swim.

To which the shores of Croesus, in the fens,
Would look like little dolphins, when they sail
In the vast shadow of the British whale.

4. To pass smoothly along.

Speak again, bright angel! for thou art
As glorious to this sight, being o'er my head,
As a winged messenger from heav'n.

Shakespeare.

When he bestrides the lazy-pacing clouds,
And sits upon the bosom of the air. Shakespeare.
To SAIL, v. a.

1. To pass by means of sails.
A thousand ships were wann'd to sail the sea. Dryden.

View Aleutian's groves, from whence Sailing upon the boundless deep,
To Anteanu precious fruits arriv'd. Philips

2. To fly through.
Sublime the sails
Tri-ial speed, and mounts the winged gales. Pope.
SAILER, n. f. [sailor is more usual, sailer
SAILOR, n. f. more analogical; from sail.]
A seaman; one who practices or understands navigation.
They had many times men of other countries that were no sailors. Bacon.

Pathe'd by his lee they lay;
To sailing words through their torn canvass play.
And flagging sails on heartless sailors fall. Dryden.
Young Pompey built a fleet of large ships, and had good sailors, commanded by experienced captains. Arbutnot.

Fall in the openings of the spacious main
In masts, and, lo! descends the sailor train. Pope.
SAIL-YARD, n. f. [sail and yard.] The pole on which the sail is extended.

With glance to swift the subtle lightning pass,
As split the julyards. Dryden.
SALM, n. f. [salm, Italian.] Lard. It still denotes this in the northern counties, and in Scotland: as, swine's salm.

SAY, a participle, obsolete, from say.]
Said.
Some obscure precedence, that hath tofore been said. Shakespeare.

SAINFOIN, n. f. [sainfoin, Fr. medica.] A kind of herb.

SAINTE, n. f. [saint, Fr. sanctus, Lat.] A person eminent for piety and virtue.
To thee be worship and thy saints for awe. Shakf.
She will not stay the fire of loving tears,
Nor open her lap to saint seducing gold. Shakespeare.

Then thus I cloath my naked villainy
With odd old ends, stol'n forth of holy writ,
And from a saint when most I play the devil. Shakf.
Miracles are required of all who aspire to this degree, because they say an hypocrite may imitate a saint in all other particulars. Addison.

For this example kings are taught to say,
He is to be let, and saints may learn to pray. Gray.
So unable to be compos'd a mind;
I am yet lost to strong, yet to resist;
If such as its pure gold, by tortures try'd;
The faint saint had it, but the woman dy'd. Pope.

To SAINT, v. a. [from the noun.] To number among saints; to reckon among saints by a publick decree; to canonize.
Are not the principles of these wretches still saint, and their persons sainted, by a race of men of the same stamp? South.

Over-gaud the church stands a large hospital,
Gilded by a thousand, who has been beatified,
though never sainted. Addison.
The place is here, sa! sider; come away:
Ore, like thyself, I trembled, wept, and pray'd;
I ore's victim then, though now a fainted maid. Pope.

To SAINT, v. n. To act with a show of piety.

SAINTE, adj. [from saint.]
1. Holy; pious; virtuous.

Thy royal father
Was a most faint king: the queen that bore thee,
Cresset upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day the liv'd. Shakespeare.

2. Holy; sacred.
I ho! you on a thing enskied and fainted,
By your remembrance an immortal spirit,
And to be talk'd with in sincerity
As with a saint. Shakespeare

The crown virtue gives,
After this mortal change, to her true servants,
Amongst the cutthroat gods on fainted hills. Milt.

SAINT Joan's Wort, n. f. [hypericum.] A plant.

SAINTLIKE, adj. [saint and like.]
1. Suiting a saint; becoming a saint.

It still thou do't retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Glois'd over only with a saintlike show,
Still thou art bound to vice. Dryden.

2. Resembling a saint.
The king, in whose time it pass'd, whom catholicks count a saintlike and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

SAINTLY, adj. [from saint.] Like a saint;
becoming a saint.

I mention still
Him whom thy wrongs, with faintly patient borne,
Made famous in a land and times obscure. Milton.

SAINTSHIP, n. f. [from saint.] The character or qualities of a saint.

He that thinks his saintship he owes him to cru-cifixes, is to be looked on not only as a rebel, but an usurper. Decay of Piet.

This favours something ranker than the tenets of the fifth monarchy, and of sovereignty founded upon saintship. South.

The devil was piqu'd such saintship to behold,
And long'd to tempt him. Pope.

SAKE, n. f. [from Sax. saeke, Dutch.]

1. Final cause; end; purpose.

Thou neither do't persuade me to seek wealth
For empire's sake, nor empire to affect For glory's sake. Milton.

The prophane person serves the devil for naught,
and has only for his sake.
Wyndham like a tyrant throws the dart,
And takes a cruel pleasure in the smart;
Proud of the ravage that her heauties make,
Delights in wounds, and kills for killing's sake. Granville.

2. Account; regard to any person or thing.

Would I were young for your sake, mistress Anne! Shakespeare.
The general to likes your music, that he desires you, for love's sake, to make no more noise with it.

SAKER, n. f. [Saker originally signifies a hawk, the pieces of artillery being often denominated from birds of prey.]

The cannon, blunderbuss, and saker,
He was th' inventor of, and maker. Hudibras.

According to observations made with one of her majesty's sakers, and a very accurate pendulum chronometer, a bullet, at its first discharge, flies five hundred and ten yards in five half seconds, which is a mile in a little above seventeen half seconds. Darham.

SAKERIT, n. f. [from saker.] The male of a saker-hawk.

This kind of hawk is esteemed next after the falcon and pye-falcon. Baldy.

SALT, n. f. [Latin.] Salt. A word often used in pharmacy.

Saltacids will help its passing off; as salt pronel.

Salt gem is so called from its breaking frequently into gem-like squares. It differs not in property from the common salt of the salt springs, or that of the sea, when all are equally pure. Woodward.

Salt Ammoniac is found still in Ammonia, as mentioned by the ancients, and from whence it had its name. Woodward.

SALACIOUS, adj. [salacis, Lat. salace,
Fr.] Lustful; lecherous.

One more salacious, rich, and old,
Out-bids, and buys her. Dryden.

Feed him with herbs
Of generous warmth, end of salacious kind. Dryd.

Animals spleened, grow extremely salacious.

SALACIOUSLY, adv. [from salacious.]
Lecherously; lustfully.

SALACITY, n. f. [salacitas, Latin; from salacious.] Lust; lechery.

Immoderate salacity and excess of venery is supposed to shorten the lives of cocks. Brown.

A aggressive acrimony in the seminal lymph produces salacity. Floyer.

SALAD, n. f. [salade, Fr. salact, German.] Food of raw herbs. It has been always pronounced familiarly sallet.

I climbed into this garden to pick a salad, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach. Shakespeare.

My sallet days,
When I was green in judgment, cold in blood. Shakespeare.

You have, to rectify your palate,
An olive, capers, or some better salad,
Ush'ring the merron. Ben Jonson.

Some coarse cold salad is before thee set;
Fall on. Dryden.

The happy old Carician's fruits and salads, oft they have lived contented, were all of his own growth. Dryden.

Leaves, eaten raw, are termed salad: if boiled,
they become pot-herbs, and some of those plants which are pot-herbs in one family, are salad in another. Watts.

SALAMANDER, n. f. [salamandre, Fr;
salamandra, Latin] An animal supposed to live in the fire, and imagined to be very poisonous. Ambrose Parry has a picture of the salamander, with a receipt for her bite; but there is no such creature, the name being now given to a poor harmless insect.

The salamander lives in the fire, and hath force
also to extinguish it. Bacon.

According to this hypothesis, the whole lunar world is a torrid zone, and may be supposed uninhabitable, except they are salamanders which dwell therein. Granville.

Whereas it is commonly said that a salamander
extinguisheth fire, we have found by experience, that on hot coals it dieth immediately. Brown.

The salut was so compassed with fire and smoke, that one would have thought nothing but a salamander could have been safe in such a situation.
Addison.

SALAMANDER'S Hair, n. f. A kind of

SALMON, n. f. [salmo, Lat. salmon, Fr. A fish.

The salmon is accounted the king of fresh-water fish, and is bred in rivers relating to the sea, yet far from it as admits no mixture of brackish water. He is said to cast his spawn in August. Long is that when they dig a hole in a safe place in gravel, and there place their eggs or spawn, and the mother has done his natural office, and then cover it over with gravel and stones, and so leave to their Creator's protection; who, by a gentle heat which he infuses into that cold element makes it brood and beget life in the spawn, and become salets early in the spring: they hatch the sea before winter, both the mother and spawn. — Sir Francis Bacon observes the age of a salmon exceeds not ten years. After he is got into the sea he becomes from a salet, not to big as a gudgeon to be a salmon, in as short a time as a gudgeon becomes a gudgeon. Water.

They spoke them with an instrument somewhat like the salmon spear. Carew.

They take salmon and trouts by pronging and tickling them under the bellies in the pools, when they hover, and so throw them on land. Carew.

SALSOACID, adj. [salisus and acidus, Lat.] Having a taste compounded of saline and sourness.

The salsoacids help its passing off; as sal promotes. Fleur.

SALISUGINOUS, adj. [salisugo, Lat.] Salubus, somewhat salt.

The distinction of salts, whereby they are distinguished into acid, volatile, or salisuginous, it may be said the fugitive salts of animal substances, and fixed or calcareous, may appear of much use in natural philosophy. Boyle.

SALT, n. f. [salt, Gothic; peaks, Saxon. sal, Lat. sel, Fr.]

Salt is a body whose two essential properties seem to be, dissolubility in water, and a pungent sapor: it is an active incombustible substance: it gives all bodies consistence, and preserves them from corruption, and occasions all the variety of tastes. There are three kinds of salts, fixed, volatile, and essential; fixed salt is drawn by calcining the matter, then boiling the ashes in a good deal of water: after this the solution is filtrated, and all the moisture evaporated, when the salt remains in a dry form at the bottom: this is called a lixivious salt. Volatile salt is that drawn chiefly from the parts of animals, and some putrified parts of vegetables: it rises easily, and is the most volatile of any. The essential salt is drawn from the juice of plants by crystallization. Harri.

It is discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue and liberality, the spice and salt that season a man? Shakspeare.

He perfidiously has given up,
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,
To his wife and mother. Shakspeare.

Since salts differ much, some being fixt, some volatile, some acid, and some urinous, the two qualities wherein they agree are, that it is easily dissoluble in water, and affects the palate with a sapour, good or evil. Boyle.

A particle of salt may be compared to a chaos, being dense, hard, dry, and earthy in the centre, and rare, soft, and moist in the circumference. Newton.

Salts are bodies friable and brittle, in some degree pellucid, sharp or pungent to the taste, and dissoluble in water; but after that is evaporated, incorporating, crystallizing, and forming themselves into angular figures. Woodward.

Observing the ulcer sanious, I proposed digestion as the only way to remove the pain.
Wifeman.

SANITY. n. f. [santas, Latin.] Soundness of mind.

How pregnant, sometimes, his replies are!
 A happiness that often madness hits on,
 Which sanity and reason could not be
 So profusely delivered of.
Shakespeare.

SANK. n. The preterit of sink.

As if the opening of her mouth to Zelmene had opened some great floodgate of sorrow, whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sank to the ground.
Sidney.

Our men followed them close, took two ships, and gave divers others of their ships their death's wounds, whereof soon after they sank and perished.
Bacon.

SANS. prep. [French.] Without. Out of use.

Last scene of all,
 That ends this strange eventful history,
 Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
 Sane teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.
Shakespeare.

For nature so preposterously to err,
 Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
 Sans witchcraft could not.
Shakespeare.

SAP. n. f. [sæpe, Saxon; sap, Dutch.]

The vital juice of plants; the juice that circulates in trees and herbs.

 Now in the same bathing his tender feet.
Spenser.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid
 In sap consuming winter's drizzled snow,
 And all the conduits of my blood freeze up,
 Yet hath my night of life some memory.
Shakespeare.

Wound the bark of our fruit trees,
 I sell, being over-proud with sap and blood,
 With too much riches it confound itself.
Shakespeare.

His presence had infused
 Into the plant scintillant saps.
Milner.

The sap which at the root is bred
 In trees, through all the boughs is spread.
Walker.

Vegetables consist of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth.
Arbuthnot.

To SAP. v. a. [sapper, Fr. sappare, Ital.] To undermine; to subvert by digging to mine.

 Lake saphire pearl, in rich embroidery.
Shakespeare.

He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
 And on the saphire spreads a heavenly blue.
Blackmore.

That the saphire should grow foul, and lose a beauty, when worn by one that is so heroic, as many other fabulous stories of gems, are great arguments that their virtue is equivalent to the value.
Derham.

SAPPHIRINE. adj. [sapphirinus, Latin.] Made of sapphire; resembling sapphire.

She was too sapphirine and clear for thee;
 Clue, flint, and jet now thy fit dwelling, she.

Boyle.

SAPIENCE. n. f. [sapientia, Fr. sapientia Lat.] Wisdom; sageness; knowledge.

By sapience, I mean what the ancients did by philosophy; the habit or disposition of mind which importeth the love of wisdom.

Not only they that dwell in lowly dust,
 The sons of darkness and of ignorance;
 But they whom thou, great Jove, by doom ordain'd
 Didst to the top of honour erst advance:

They now, put up with a delightful indulgence.
Despite the brood of blessed sapience. Spenser.
King James, of immortal memory, among all the lovers and admirers of divine and human sapience, accomplished at Theobalds his own days on earth. Watson.

Because enterprises guided by ill counsels have equal success to those by the best judgment conducted, therefore had violence the same external figure with sapience. Raleigh.

Sapience and love
Immease, and all his father in him shone. Milton.

O sov'reign, virtuous, precious of all trees
In paradise! of operation blest
To sapience. Milton.

Many a wretch in Bedlam,
Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about,
Still has gratitude and sapience,
To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift.

SAPIENT. adj. [sapiens, Lat.] Wife;

sarabande, Fr.] A Spanish dance.

The several modifications of this tune-playing quality in a fiddle, to play preludes, sarabands, jigs, and gavots, are as much real qualities in the instrument as the thought is in the mind of the composer. Arbutnot and Pope.

SARCASM. n. f. [sarcasme, Fr. sarcas- mus, Lat.] A keen reproach; a taunt;
a gibe.

Sarcisms of wit are transmitted in story.
Government of the Tongue.

Rejoice, O young man, says Solomon, in a severe sarcasm, in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart; but know that for these things
God will bring thee into judgment. Rogers.

When an angry master says to his servant, It is bravely done, it is one way of giving a severe reproach; for the words are spoken by way of sar- casm, or irony. Watts.

SARCASTICAL. } adj. [from sarcas- SARCASTICK. } Keen; taunting; severe.

What a fierce and sarcastick reprehension would this have drawn from the friendship of the world, and yet what a gentle one did it receive from Christ? South.

SARCASTICALLY. adv. [from sarcastical.]
Tauntingly; severely.

He asked a lady playing with a lap-dog, whether the women of that country used to have any children or no? thereby sarcastically reproaching them for misplacing that affection upon brutes, which could only become a mother to her child. South.

SARCENET. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be sericum saracenicum, Lat.] Fine thin woven silk.

Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of fleec'd silk, thou green sarcenet flap for a fore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse?
Shakespeare.

If they be covered, though but with linen or sar- cenet, it intercepts the effluvia. Brown.

These are they that cannot bear the heat
Of figur'd silks, and under sarcenet sweat. Dryden.

She darts from sarcenet unbusht wily leers,
Twitches thy sleeve, or with familiar airs
Her fan will put the check, these smiles disdain. Gay.

To SARCLE. v. a. [sarcler, Fr. sarculo, Lat.] To weed corn. Ainsworth.

SARCOLE. n. f. [σάρξ and κόλα; sar- cole, Fr.] A fleshy excrescence of the testicles, which sometimes grows so large as to stretch the scrotum much beyond its natural size. Quincy.

SARCOMA. n. f. [σάρκωμα.] A fleshy excrescence, or lump, growing in any part of the body, especially the nostrils.

SARCOPHAGOUS. adj. [σάρξ and φάγω.]
Flesh-eating; feeding on flesh.

SARCOPHAGY. n. f. [σάρξ and φάγω.]
The practice of eating flesh.

There was no sarcophagy before the flood; and,
without the eating of flesh, our fathers preferred themselves unto longer lives than their posterity.
Brown.

SARCOTICK. n. f. [from σάρξ; sarcotique,
Fr.] A medicine which fills up ulcers with new flesh; an incarnative.

The humour was immoderately repressed, and breathed forth; after which the ulcer incarnated with common sarcoticks, and the ulcerations about it were cured by ointment of tuty. Wifeman

SARCIATION. n. f. [sarcine, Latin].
The act of weeding; plucking up weeds.
Dig.

SARDEL. } n. f. A sort of precious
SARDINE Stone. } stone.

SARDIUS. } He that sat was to look upon, like a jasper and a sardine stone. Revelation.

Thou shalt set in it four rows of stone; the first row shall be a sardius. Ezodus.

SARDOXYX. n. f. A precious stone.

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agate kind: 'tis of a dark horry colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red: when on one or both sides the white there happens to be also a plate of a reddish colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonyx. Woodward.

SARK. n. f. [sark, Sax.]

1. A shark or shunk.

2. In Scotland it denotes a shirt.
Flaunting beaus gang with their beauty open, and their sarks over their widdowats. Arbutnot.

SARN. n. f. A British word for pavement, or stepping stones, still used in the same sense in Berkshire and Hampshire.

SARPIER. n. f. [sarpierre, Fr.] A piece of canvas for wrapping up wares;
a packing-cloth. Bailey.

SARRASINE. n. f. [In botany.] A kind of birthwort. Bailey.

SARSA. } n. f. Both a tree and SARSAPARILLA. } an herb. Ainsworth.

SARSE. n. f. [perhaps because made of sar- cenet.] A sort of fine lawn sieve. Bailey.

To SARSE. v. a. [sasser, Fr.] To sift through a sieve or searfe. Bailey.

SART. n. f. [In agriculture.] A piece of woodland turned into arable. Bailey.

SASH. n. f. [Of this word the etymologists give no account: I suppose it comes from schache, of schair, to know, a sash worn being a mark of distinction;
and a sash window being made particularly for the sake of seeing and being seen.]

1. A belt worn by way of distinction; a silken band worn by officers in the army.

2. A window to formed as to be let up and down by pulleys.

She ventures now to lift the sash;
The window is her proper place. Swift.

She broke a pane in the sash window that looked into the yard. Swift.

SASHOON. n. f. A kind of leather slinging put into a boot for the weaver's ease.

SASSAFRAS. n. f. A tree. The wood is medicinal.

SAT. The preterit of sit.

The picture of Jan Venus, that
For which, men say, the goddess sat,
Was lost, till Iely from your look Again that glorious image took. Waller.

I answered not the rehearsal, because I knew the author sat to himself when he drew the picture, and was the very Bay of his own farce. Dryden.

SATANICAL. } adj. [from Satan, the SATANICK. } prince of hell.] Devilish; infernal.

The faint satanick host,
Defensive scarce Milton.

SATCHEL. n. f. [seckel, German; saccu- lus, Lat. Perhaps better sichel.] A little bag: commonly a bag used by schoolboys.

The whining schoolboy with his satchel

And shining morning face, creeping like snail Unwillingly to school.
Schoolboy's lag with fatichels in their hands.

To SATURATE. v. a. [satio, Lat.] To satiate; to glut; to pall; to feed beyond natural desires.

Sated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me.

How well their bodies creep
Enrich the victors, while the victime fates
Their maws with full a part.

Thy sweets first with, mistaken king, employ,
So ed with rage, and moment of joy.

SATELLITE. n. f. [satelles, Lat. satellite,
Fr.] This word is commonly pronounced in prose with the e mute in the plural, as in the singular, and is therefore only of three syllables, but Pope has in the plural continued the Latin form, and assigned it four; I think, improperly.] A small planet revolving round a larger.

Four moons move about Jupiter, and five about Saturn, called their satellites.

The smallest planets are situated nearest the sun and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, and have many satellites about them, are widely removed to the extreme regions of the system.

Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove? Pope.
SATELLITIOUS. adj. [from satelles, Lat.]

Committing of satellites.
Their tidality and openness, and their satellitious attendance, their revolutions about the sun, and their relations about their axis, are exactly the same.

To SATIATE. v. a. [satio, Lat.]

1. To satisfy; to fill.
Those faculties are the most grateful where the degree of heat is small, or the strength of the smell allayed; for these rather woo the sense than satiate it.

Buying or lending is the result of a full and satiated gain; and men in trade seldom think of laying out their money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ.

The loosen'd winds
Hurl'd high above the clouds; till all their force
Consum'd, her rav'nous jaws the earth satiated clos'd.

2. To glut; to pall; to fill beyond natural desire.
Whatever novelty presents, children are presently eager to have a taste, and are as soon sati-ated with it.

He may be satiated, but not satisfy'd.

3. To gratify desire.
I may yet survive the malice of my enemies,
Although they should be satiated with my blood.

4. To saturate; to impregnate with as much as can be contained or imbibed.
Why does not salt or tartar draw more water out of the air, than in a certain proportion to its quantity, but for want of an attractive force after it is satiated with water?

SATIATE. adj. [from the verb.] Glutted; full to satiety. When it has with, it seems a participle; when of, an adjective.

Our generals retir'd to their estates,
In life's cool evening, satiated of applause,
Nor think of bleeding ev'n in Brunswick's cause.

Now may'st and slaves all hush'd and satiated
lay.

Yet, in dreams, the cuckold of the day.

SATIRY. n. f. [satira, Lat. satire, Fr.]
Fulness beyond desire or pleasure; more than enough; wearisomeness of plenty;
state of being pallied or glutted.

He leaves a shallow glass to plunge him in the deep.

And with satire seeks to quench his thirst.

Nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the winning-time and suspect of satire.

In all pleasures there is satire; and after they be used, their verdure departeth.

Though pleasant; but thy words, with grace divine
Imbu'd, bring to their sweetness no satire.

No action, the usefulness of which has made it the matter of duty, but a man may bear the continual pursuit of, without loathing or satire.

The joy unequal'd, its end it gains,
With not satire, though e'er to bleed,
And but more satire'd as the more distress'd.

SATIR. n. f. [satira, Fr. drapo di satira, Italian; satire, Dutch.] A foil close and shining silk.

Upon her body she wore a doublet of sky-colour
satir, covered with plates of gold, and as it were nailed with precious stones, that in it she might seem armed.

The ladies dress'd in rich satirs were seen,
Of Florence satir, flower'd with white and green,
And for satirs betwixt the bloomy garden.

Her petticoat, transform'd apace,
Became black satir flower'd with lace.

Lay the child carefully in a case, covered with a mantle of blue satir.

SATIRE. n. f. [satira, anciently satira,
Lat. not from satyrus, a satyr; satire, Fr.] A poem in which wickedness or folly is censured. Proper satire is distinguished, by the generality of the reflections, from a lampoon which is aimed against a particular person; but they are too frequently confounded: it has on before the subject.

He dares to sing thy praises in a satire
Where vice triumphs, and virtue is a crime;
Where ev'n to draw the picture of thy mind,
Is satire on the most of human kind.

My verse is satire, Dorset lend your ear,
And patronise a muse you cannot fear.

SATIRICAL. adj. [satiricus, Lat. satirical, Fr. from satire.]

1. Belonging to satire; employed in writing of invective.
You must not think, that a satirical style
Allows of scandalous and brutal words.

What human kind desires, and what they shun,
Rage, passions, pleasures, impotence of will,
Shall this satirical collection fill.

2. Censorious; severe in language.
Slanders, sir; for the satirical slave says here,
That old men have grey beards; that their fuses are wrinkled.

He that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of others memory.

On me when dunces are satirical,
I take it for a panegyrick.

SATIRICALLY. adv. [from satirical.] With invective; with intention to censure or vilify.

He applies them satirically to some customs, and kinds of philosophy, which he arraigns.

SATIRIST. n. f. [from satire.] One who writes satires.

I first adventure, follow me who list,
And he the second English satirist.

Wycherly, in his writings, is the sharpest satirist of his time; but, in his nature, he has all the softness of the tenderest dispositions; in his writings he is severe, bold, undertaking; in his nature gentle, modest, offensive.

All vain pretenders have been constantly the topics of the most candid satirists, from the Codrus of Juvenal to the Damon of Boileau.

Yet left his nature, though govern his by
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay:
Which satirist who touch'd the mean to true
As show'd vice had his hate and pity too.

To SATIRIZE. v. a. [satirizer, Fr. from satire.] To censure as in a satire.

Civetousness is described as a veil cast over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness.

Should a writer single out and point his railing at particular persons, or satirize the miserable, he might be sure of pleasing a great part of his readers but must be a very ill man if he could please himself.

I insist that my lion's mouth be not declaimed toward it, for I would not make use of him to rend
the human species, and satirize his better.

It is as hard to satirize well a man of distinguished virtues, as to praise well a man of distinguished vices.

SATISFACTION. n. f. [satisfactio, Latin
satisfactio, Fr.]

1. The act of pleasing to the full, or state being pleased.
Run over the circle of earthly pleasures, as had not God secured a man a solid pleasure to his own actions, he would be forced to compile that pleasure was not satisfaction.

2. The act of pleasing.
The mind, having a power to suspend the exection and satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to consider the objects of them.

3. The state of being pleased.
'Tis a wretched satisfaction, a revengeful m-takes, even in losing his life, provided his creator for company.

There are very few discourses so short, clear, a-confident, to which most men may not, with satisfaction enough to themselves, raise a doubt.

4. Release from suspense, uncertainty, or uneasiness; conviction.
Wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?
—What satisfaction can you have?

5. Gratification; that which pleases.
Of every nation each illustrious name,
Such toys as these have chanted into fame;
Exchanging solid quiet to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain.

6. Amends; atonement for a crime; it compensates for an injury.
Doe he or justice must; unless for him
Some other able, and as willing, pay
The rigid satisfaction, death for death.

SATISFACTIVE. adj. [satisfactus, Latin Giving satisfaction.
By a final and satisfactive discoment of fa-we lay the last effects upon the first cause of a things.

SATISFACTORILY. adv. [from satisfactory.] So as to content.
Belonius hath been more satisfactorily expemental, not only affixing that chanceless firmness, but upon excretion he found their annals in their bellies.

They strain their memory to answer him satisfactorily unto all his demands.

SATISFACTORINESS. n. f. [from satisfactory.] Power of satisfying; power of giving content.
The incompleteness of the seraphic lover's happiness in his illusions, proceeds not from their of satisfactoriness, but his want of an entire pos-sion of them.

SATISFACTORY. adj. [satisfactorius, Fr.
satisfactus, Lat.]

1. Giving satisfaction; giving content.
An intelligent American would scarce take a satisfactory account, it, desiring to learn of architecture, he should be told that a pillar was thing supported by a basis.

2. Atoning; making amends.
A most wise and sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfaction and mortification death and obedience of the incarnate Son of God, Jesus Christ. Scotcher.

To SATISFY. v. a. [satisfaire, Fr. satis-facio, Latin.]

1. To content; to please to such a degree as that nothing more is desired.

A good man shall be satisfied from himself.

I'm satisfied. My boy has done his duty. Proverbs.

2. To feed to the fill.

Who hath caused it to rain on the earth, to satisfy the desolate and waste ground, and to cause the bud of the tender tree to spring forth? Jab.

I will pursue and divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them. Ezra.

The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul. Proverbs.

3. To recompense; to pay to content.

He is well paid that is well satisfied;

And I, delivering you, am satisfied,

And therein do account myself well paid. Shaksp.

4. To appease by punishment.

Will he draw out,

For anger's sake, finite to infinite

In punishment, to satisfy his rigor,

Existed never? That were to extend

His sentence beyond dust and Nature's law. Milton.

5. To free from doubt, perplexity, or suspense.

Of many things useful and curious you may satisfy yourselves in Leonardo de Vinci. Dryden.

This I would willingly be satisfied in, whether the soul, when it thinks thus, separate from the body, acts less rationally than when conjointly with it? Locke.

6. To convince.

He declares himself satisfied to the contrary, in such he has given up the cause. Dryden.

When come to the utmost extremity of body, that can there put a stop and satisfy the mind that is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that only itself can move into it! Locke.

The final evidences of the truth of the Gospel are in the inflexible most firm, solid, and satisfactory. Atterbury.

7. SATISFY. v. a.

To give content.

To feed to the full.

To make payment.

By the quantity of silver they give or take, they estimate the value of other things, and satisfy for what thus silver becomes the measure of commerce. Locke.

8. SATURABLE. adj. [from saturate.] Impregnable with any thing till it will receive no more.

Be the figures of the fables never so various, yet

if the atoms of water were fluid, they would always conform to those figures as to fill up all vacu-ities, and consequently the water would be satu-

rable with the same quantity of any salt, which it is not. Crow.

9. SATURANT. adj. [from saturans, Latin.]

Impregnating to the fill.

To SATURATE. v. a. [satur, Latin.]

To impregnate till no more can be received or imbibed.

Rain-water is plentifully saturated with ter-restial matter, and more or less stored with it.

His body has been fully saturated with the fluid of light, to be able to last for many years without any sensible diminution, though there are constant emanations thereof. Cheyne.

Still night succeeds

A storm'd shade, and saturated earth

Awaits the morning beams. Thomson.

10. SATURDAY. n. s. [saterneburg, or saterneburg, Sax. according to Ver- legen, from sater, a Saxon idol; more probably from Satur, dies Saturni.]

The last day of the week.

This matter I handled fully in last Saturday's Spectator. Addison.

SATURNITY. n. s. [saturitas, from satur, Lat.] Fulness; the state of being saturated; repletion.

SATURN. n. s. [saturne, Fr. saturnus,
Latin.]

1. A remote planet of the solar system:
supposed by astrologers to impress melancholy, dulness, or severity of temper.

The smallest planets are placed nearest the sun
and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, are wisely removed to the extreme regions. Bentley.

From the far bounds

Of utmost Saturn, wheeling wide his round. Thomson.

2. [In chymistry.] Lead.

SATURNINE. adj. [saturninus, Lat. saturni- nien, Fr. from Saturn.] Not light; not volatile; gloomy; grave; melancholy;

severe of temper: supposed to be born
under the dominion of Saturn.

I may cast my readers under two divisions, the merciful and saturnine: the first are the gay part,
the others are of a more sober and solemn turn.

Addison.

SATURNIAN. adj. [saturnius, Latin.]

Happy; golden: used by poets for times of felicity, such as are assigned to have been in the reign of Saturn.

'Th' Augustus, born to bring saturnian times.

Pope.

SATYR. n. s. [satyrus, Lat.] A sylvan god: supposed among the ancients to be rude and lecherous.

Satyrus, as Pliny testifies, were found in times past in the eastern mountains of India. Peacham.

SATYRIASIS. n. s. [from satyr.]

It is the chyle very plentiful, it breeds a satyri-sis, or an abundance of venereal lymphas. Flower.

SAVAGE. adj. [savage, Fr. silvaggio,
Italian.]

1. Wild; uncultivated.

Those godlike virtues wherefore dost thou hide,

Affecting private life, or more obscure

In savage wilderness? Milton.

Cornels, and savage berries of the wood,

And roots and herbs, have been my meagre food.

Dryden.

2. Untamed; cruel.

Chain me to some steep mountain's top,

Where roaring bears and savage lions roam.

Shakspere.

Hence with your little ones:

To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage;

To do worse to you, were less cruelty. Shakspere.

Tyrants no more their savage nature kept,

And toes to virtue wonder'd how they wept. Pope.

3. Uncivilized; barbarous; untaught;

wild; brutal.

Thus people lived altogether a savage life, till

Saturn, arriving on those coasts, devised laws to govern them by. Raleigh.

The savage clamour drown'd

Both harp and voice. Milton.

A herd of wild beasts on the mountains, or a savage drove of men in caves, might be so disordered; but in a peculiar people. Spratt.

SAVAGE. n. s. [from the adjective.] A man untaught and uncivilized; a barbarian.

Long after these times were they but savages.

Raleigh.

The seditions lived by rapine in a room of all the country, omitting nothing of that which savages, enraged in the height of their untamed behaviour,

do commit. Hayward.

To deprive us of metals is to make us mere savages; to change our corn for the old Arcadian diet, our houses and cities for dens and caves, and our clothing for skins of beasts: 'tis to deprive us of all arts and sciences, nay, of reverted religion.

Bentley.

To SAVAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To make barbarous, wild, or cruel. A word not well authorized.

Friends, relations, Love himself,

Savag'd by war, forget the tender tie. Thomson.

SAVAGELY. adv. [from savage.] Barbarously; cruelly.

Your cattle is surpris'd, your wife and babes

Savagely slaughter'd. Shakspere.

SAVAGENESS. n. s. [from savage.] Barbarousness; cruelty; wildness.

A satageness in unreclaimed blood

Of general assault. Shakspere.

Wolves and bears, they say,

Calling thus satageness aside, have done

like offices of pity. Shakspere.

The Cyclops were a people of Sicily, remarkable for satageness and cruelty. Brown.

SAVAGERY. n. s. [from savage.]

1. Cruelty; barbarity.

This is the bloodiest shame,

The wildest satageness, the vilest stroke,

That ever wall-eyed Wrath, or flaming Rage,

Present'd to the tears of lost Remorse. Shakspere.

2. Wild growth.

Her fallow less

The darnel, hemlock, and rank sumptuary,

Doth root upon; while that the culter ruts,

That should denigrate such satageness. Shakspere.

SAVANNA. n. s. [Spanish, according to

Barley.] An open meadow without wood; pasture-ground in America.

He that rides post through a country may tell how, in general, the parts lie; here a marsh, and there a river, woodland in one part, and savannas

in another. Locke.

Plains immense,

And vast savannas, where the wand'ring eye,

Unhappily, is in a verdant ocean lost. Thomson.

SAUCE. n. s. [sauce, sautis, Fr. salsa,
Italian.]

1. Something eaten with food to improve its taste.

The bitter sauce of the sport was, that we had our honours for ever lost, partly by our own faults,

but principally by his faulty doing of our faults.

Sidney.

To feed were best at home;

From thence the sauce to meat is ceremony;

Meeting were bare without it. Shakspere.

Epicurean cooks

Sharpen with dainties sauce his appetite. Shakspere.

Such was the sauce of Mod's noble feast,

'Till night far spent waxes them to their rest.

Cowley.

He that spends his time in sports, is like him whose meat is nothing but sauce; they are health-less, chargeable, and useless. Taylor.

High sauces and rich pieces are fetched from the Indies. Baker.

2. To serve one the same SAUCE. A vulgar phrase to retaliate one injury with another.

To SAUCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To accompany meat with something of higher relish.

2. To gratify with rich tastes. Obsolete.

Earth, yield me roots,

Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate

With thy moist opiate poison. Shakspere.

3. To intermix or accompany with any thing good, or, ironically, with any thing bad.

Then fell she to sauce her desires with threatnings, so that we were in a great perplexity, re-framed to so unworthy a bondage, and yet restrained by love, which I cannot tell how, in noble minds, by a certain duty, claims an answering.

Sidney.

All the delights of love, wherein wanton youth walloweth, he but busy mix'd with bitterness, and forrow sauces with repentance. Spenser.

Then fast his meat was sauces with thy up-

boardings;

Unquiet meals make ill digestions. Shakspere.

SAUCEBOX. n. f. [from sauce, or rather from saucy.] An impertinent or petulant fellow.

SCATTERINGLY. adv. [from scattering.] Loosely; dispersedly.

The Scymonds have here and there scatteringly
upon the scattered and up some towns.

These drops of pretence, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to delectate and exalt our conceptions, not to involve or detain our passions.

SCATTERING. n. f. [from scatter.] A vagabond; one that has no home or settled habitation. An elegant word, but diluted.

Such loaths and scattering cannot easily, by any ordinary officer, be gotten, when children, for any such fact.

Gathering unto him all the scatterings and outlays out of all the woods and mountains, in which they long had lurk'd, he march'd forth into the English plain.

SCATURIENT. adj. [scaturiens, Latin.] Springing as a fountain.

SCENE. n. f. [scena, Lat. scenæ, French.]

1. The stage; the theatre of dramatic poetry.

2. The general appearance of any action the whole texture of objects; a display; a series; a regular disposition.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,
A scenary scene; and as the ranks attend
Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stretch'd view.

Now prepare thee for another scene.
A mute scene of sorrow, mixt with fear,
Still on the table lay the unsmil'd cheer.

A larger scene of action is display'd,
And, rising hence, a greater work is weigh'd.

Every fewal place must be
A scene of triumph and revenge to me.

When rising spring adorns the mead,
A charming scene of nature is display'd.
Eternity! thou pleading, dreadful thought!

Through what variety of nutty'd thoughts,
Through what new scenes and changes must pass!

About eight miles distance from Naples he very noble scene of antiquities: what they to Virgil's tomb is the first.

Say, the scenery, say, are these reflections true?
Or was it but the woman's tear that drew
This cruel scene, unjust to love and you?

3. Part of a play.

It shall be in my care
To have you royally appointed, as if
The scene you play were mine.

Our author would excuse these youthful begotten at his entrance.

4. So much of an act of a play as passes between the same persons in the same place.

It has characters were good,
The scenes entire, and freed from noise and bustle
The action great, yet circumscribed by time.
The words not forc'd, but sliding into time.

He thought, in hitting thiele, his business done.

5. The place represented by the stage.

The king is set from London, and the
is now transported to Southampton.

6. The hanging of the theatre adapted to the play.

 Her compasses her former track, and uses all possible methods to divert the scēnt. Harris.

2. The object of smell; odour good or bad.

Be hush'd upon it at the meekest loss,
 And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scēnt. Shakespeare.

The plague, they report, hath a scēnt of the faint of a mallow apple. Bacon.

Good scēnts do purify the brain,
 As like the lasey, and the wits refine. Davies.

The season, prime for sweetest scēnts and airs. Milton.

But as, 'till he finds their nobler sense
 The disposition of speed does recompense;
 The court's his conquering feet, whole scēnt
 Ecstasies that fancy which their swiftness lent.

Chearful health,
 His cautious hand, through the air jumps'd,
 With hush'd and diffused scēnts ambrosial. Prior.

3. Cher followed by the smell.

He caught the observations of innumerable ages,
 And travelled upon the same scēnt into Atlantia. Temple.

TO SCENT, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smell; to perceive by the nose.

So scented the pine forests, and upstund
 His nostrils wide into the murky air,
 So, as of his quarry front to far. Milton.

2. To perfume; or to imbue with odour good or bad.

I smelt, for in a silver box distill'd around,
 Shall all bedew the rooms, and scent the sacred ground. Dryden.

 Fr.] The ring of royalty born in the hand.

You shall proud I once usurp my right,
 Nor should the sceptre in his children's hand, Shakespeare.

How, lo! of poets, do't thou laurel war!
 For two things rare the fates had in their store,
 And gave fate both, to show they could no more.

I find the man who Judah's sceptre bore
 In that right hand which held the crook before. Coates.

The parliament presented those acts which were prepared by them to the royal sceptre, in which were some laws restraining the extravagant power of nobility. Clarendon.

The court of Rome has, in other instances, forwarded its good managery, that it is not credible crowns and sceptres as a conferred gratis.

SCPTRED, adj. [from sceptre.] Bearing a sceptre.

The scptred heralds call
 To council, in the city-gates. Milton.

1. Combination of the aspects of heavenly bodies.

2. Particular form or disposition of a thing.

Every particle of matter, whatever form or sché- matism it puts on, must in all conditions be equally extended, and therefore take up the same room. Crotch.

SCHÉMATIST, n. f. [from schéma.] A projector; one given to forming schemes.

SCHEME, n. f. [σχῆμα.]

1. A plan; a combination of various things into one view, design, or purpose;
 a system.

We are our senses made much quicker, the appearance and outward schéma of things would have quite another face to us, and be inconsistent with our well being. Locke.

We shall never be able to give ourselves a satisfactory account of the divine conduct, without forming such a schéma of things as shall at once take in time and the way. Atterbury.

2. A project; a contrivance; a design.

He forms the evil-conceiv'd schéma of authority,
 'Tis fix'd, 'tis done, and both are doom'd to death. Rowe.

The haughty monarch was by his schéma for suppressing the ancient liberties, and removing the ancient boundaries of his realm. Atterbury.

The fiscal schéma of supplying our wants by lopping our desires, is like cutting off our feet
 when we want shoes. Scott.

3. A representation of the aspects of the celestial bodies; any linear or mathematical diagram.

It hath embroiled astrology in the creation of schémas, and the judgment of death and deities. Brown.

It is a schéma and face of heaven,
 As the aspects are disposed in heaven. Hudibras.

SCHÉMER, n. f. [from schéma.] A projec-tor; a contriver.

SCHÉMIS, n. f. [σχῆμα.] A habitude; state of any thing with respect to other things.

It that mind which was existing in itself from all eternity all the simple elements of things, and comquently all their possible schémis or habitues, should ever change, there would arise a new schéma in the mind, which is contrary to the supposition. Norris.

SCHISM, n. f. [σχίσμα; schisme, Fr.] A separation or division in the church of God.

Set bounds to our passions by reason, to our errors by truth, and to our schisms by charity. King Charles.

Oppose schisms by unity, hypocrisy by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Swift.

When a schisma is once spread, there grows at length a dispute which are the schismaticks: in the sense of the law the schisma lies on that side which opposes itself to the religion of the state. Swift.

SCHISMATICAL, adj. [schismatique, Fr.]

SCH II

from schismatick.] Implying schism;
 practising schism.

By these tumults all factions, seditions, and schis- matick propolis against government, ecclesiastical and civil, must be back'd. King Charles.

Here have mouths more tall but like for many bruta fulana upon the obdurate and schismatick, who are like to think the motives that which they being cut off from that body which they chose not to be of, and so being punished into a quiet enjoyment of their civil separation. South.

SCHISMATICAL, adv. [from schisma- tical.] In a schismatical manner.

SCHISMATICK, n. f. [from schisma.] One who separates from the true church.

No known heretic nor schismatick should be suffered to go into that country. Bacon.

How you be hold the schismatick in a variety of wild speaks in Epaph, and Calamy in gunado's. Butler.

The schismatick united in a schéma tongue and covenant to enter the whole schéma of spiritual government. Swift.

TO SCHISMATIZE, v. a. [from schisma.]
 To commit the crime of schism; to make a breach in the communion of the church.

SCHOLAR, n. f. [scholaris, Lat. ecolier,
 French.]

1. One who learns of a master; a disciple.

Many times that which deserves approbation would hardly find favour, if they which propose it were not to protect themselves scholars, and followers of the infants. Hooker.

The scholars of the Stagiate,
 Who for the old opinion fight,
 Would make them modern turnly confests
 The difference but from none to less. Prior.

2. A man of letters.

This scholar's late, rex angustia domi, hinders the promising of learning. Waller.

To which our eyes to correct others in their discourse, and at the same opportunity of showing their talents, scholars are most blam'd for. Locke.

3. A pedant; a man of books.

To spend too much time in studies, is sloth; to make judgment wholly by their rules, is the honour of a scholar; they perfect nature, and are perfect by experience. Bacon.

4. One who has a lettered education.

My cousin Verulam is become a good scholar:
 he at Oxford hall, is he not? Shakespeare.

SCHOLARSHIP, n. f. [from scholar.]

1. Learning; literature; knowledge.

I paid my very heart to think that a man of my master's understanding, and great scholarship, who had a book of his own in print, should talk to outrage only. Pope.

2. Literary education.

This place should be school and university, not needing a remove to any other house of scholarship. Milton.

3. Exhibition or maintenance for a scholar.

SCHOLASTICAL, adj. [scholasticus, Lat.]
 Belonging to a scholar or school.

SCHOLASTICALLY, adv. [from scholasticus.]

 the schools.

No monastic or scholastic, that treat scholastically of justice, but treat of gratitude, under that general head, as a part of it. South.

SCHOLASTICK, adj. [from schola, Lat.
scholastique, French.]

1. Pertaining to the school; practised in schools.

I would register this intelligible to every rational man, however thick veried in scholastic learning. Digby.

Scholastic education, like a trade, does to fix a man in a particular way, that he is not fit to judge of any thing that lies out of that way. Barnet.

2. Besitting the school; suitable to the school; pedantick; needlessly subtle.

The favour of proposing there, in convenient sort, whatsoever ye can object, which thing I have known shew to gain, of scholastick courtesy unto strangers, never hath nor ever will be denied you. Hooker.

Sir Francis Bacon was wont to say, that those who left useful studies for useless school thick speculations, were like the Olympick gamblers, who obtained from necessary labours, that they might be fit for such as were not so. Bacon.

Both sides charge the other with idolatry, and that is a matter of conscience, and not a scholastick nicety. Stillingfleet.

SCHOLIAST. n. f. [scholaste, Fr. scholastique, Lat.] A writer of explanatory notes.

The title of this sater, in some ancient manuscripts, was the reproach of idleness; though in others of the scholastic, 'tis inscribed against the luxury of the scholastic. Dryden.

What Gellius or Stobae is cook'd before, Or chew'd by blind old scholastic o'er and o'er. Pope.

SCHOLIUM. n. f. [Lat.] A note; an explanatory observation.

He went to have added a certain gloss or scholium, for the explication of old words, and harder phrases, which manner of glossing and commenting will seem strange in our language. Spenser.

Some call all their metaphysical and moral learning into the method of mathematicians, and bring every thing relating to those abstracted or practical sciences under theorems, problems, propositions, scholiums, and corollaries. Watts.

SCHOLY. n. f. [scholre, Fr. scholium, Lat.] An explanatory note. This word, with the verb following, is, I fancy, peculiar to the learned Hooker.

He therefore, which made us to live, hath also taught us to pray, to the end, that speaking unto the Father in the Son's own precept form, without scholy or gloss of ours, we may be sure that we utter nothing which God will deny. Hooker.

That scholy had need of a very favourable reader and tractable, that should think it plain construction, when to be commanded in the word, and grounded upon the word, are made all one. Hooker.

To SCHOLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To write explications.

The preacher should want a text, whereupon to scholy. Hooker.

SCHOOL. n. f. [schola, Lat. école, Fr.]

1. A house of discipline and instruction.

Their age the same, their inclinations too, And bred together in one school they grew. Dryden.

2. A place of literary education; an university.

My end being private, I have not expressed my conceptions in the language of the schools. Digby.

Wrote on that subject have turned it into a composition of hard words, tritles, and subtilties, for the mere use of the schools, and that only to amuse men with empty sounds. Watts.

3. A state of instruction.

The call breed to the rural trade, Set him betimes to school, and let him be instructed there in rules of husbandry. Dryden.

4. System of doctrine as delivered by particular teachers.

No craz'd brain could ever yet propound, Touching the soul, so vain and fond a thought; But some among these masters have been found, Whom in their schools the self-same thing had taught. Davies.

Let no man be less confident in his faith, concerning the great blessings God designs in these divine mysteries, by reason of any difference in the several schools of christians, concerning the consequent blessings thereof. Taylor.

5. The age of the church, and form of theology succeeding that of the fathers; so called, because this mode of treating religion arose from the use of academical disputations.

The first principles of christian religion should not be forced with school points and private tenets. Sunderlin.

A man may find an infinite number of propositions in books of metaphysics, school divinity, and natural philosophy, and know as little of God, spirits, or bodies, as he did before. Locke.

To SCHOOL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct; to train.

Unw her besought to be so good As in her virtuous rules to school her knight. Fairy Queen.

He's gentle, never school'd, and yet learned. Shakespeare.

2. To teach with superiority; to tutor.

You shall go with me;

I have some private schooling for you both. Shaksp.

Confin, school yourself; but for your husband,

He's noble, wise, judicious. Shakespeare.

School your child,

And ask why God's appointed he revild. Dryden.

If this be schooling, 'tis well for the considerer:

I'll engage that no adversary of his shall in this sense ever school him. Atterbury.

SCHOOLBOY. n. f. [School and boy.] A boy that is in his rudiments at school.

Schoolboys tears take up

The glasses of my sight. Shakespeare.

He crins, bracks, throngs, and such an such endures,

As schoolboys or schoolboys, which do know

Of me say sport abroad, yet dare not go. Donne.

Once he had heard a schoolboy tell,

How some of mortal race

Py thunder d. Swift.

SCHOOLDAY. n. f. [School and day.] Age

in which youth is sent to school.

Is all forgot?

All schooldays friendship, childhood, innocence?

Shakespeare.

SCHOOLFELLOW. n. f. [School and fellow.]

One bred at the same school.

This flattery method on the youth pursue;

Jar'd with his schoolfellow by two and two:

Persuade them first to lead an empty wheel,

In length of time produce the lab'ring yoke. Dryden.

The emulation of schoolfellows often puts life and industry into young lads. Locke.

SCHOOLHOUSE. n. f. [School and house.]

House of discipline and instruction.

For Una can Fidela far respect,

To have her knight unto her schoolhouse plac'd. Spenser.

SCHOOLMAN. n. f. [School and man.]

1. One versed in the niceties and subtilties of academical disputation.

The king, though no good schoolman, converted one of them by dispute. Bacon.

Unlearn'd, he knew no schoolman's subtle art;

No language, but the language of the heart. Pope.

2. A writer of scholastick divinity or philosophy.

If a man's wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolmen. Bacon.

To schoolmen I hequeath my doubtfulness,

My unknells to physicians. Donne.

Men of nice palates could not relish Aristotle, as he was dress'd up by the schoolmen. Baker.

Let subtle schoolmen teach their friends to fight,

More cautious to divide than to unite. Pope.

SCHOOLMASTER. n. f. [School and master.]

One who preaches and teaches in a school.

I, thy schoolmaster, have made thee more profit

Than other preachers can, that have more time

For vain hours, and tutoring to careless. Shaksp.

Adrian vt. was some time schoolmaster to Charles v.

Knolls.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians lived 'till they were an hundred years old; and so likewise

did many of the grammarians and schoolmasters, as Orbinius. Bacon.

A father may see his children taught, though he himself does not turn schoolmaster. South.

SCHOOLMISTRESS. n. f. [School and mistress.]

A woman who governs a school.

Such precepts I have selected from the most considerable which we have from nature, that schoolmistress.

SCIATICK. n. f. [sciaticque, Fr.]

hip gout.

Which of your hips has the most profound joint.

Thou couldst sciatic,

Cripple our senators, that their limbs may lie

As lamely as their manners. Shaksp.

The Sciathians, using continual riden, were generally molested with the sciatica, or hip gout. Bu.

Rack'd with sciatick, morty'd with the sciatick

Will any mortal let himself alone? Bu.

SCIATICAL. adj. [from sciatica.] Aff

ing the hip.

In obdurate sciatic pains, blistering and ries have been found effectual. Art.

SCIENCE. n. f. [science, Fr. scienza, Lat.]

1. Knowledge.

If we conceive God's sight or science, before creation, to be extended to all and every part of world, seeing every thing as it is, his particular fore-sight of any action of mine, or rather his or sight from all eternity, lays no necessity on thing to come to pass, more than my term, the move hath to do in the moving of it. Home.

The indispensible mathematicks, the only science heaven hath yet vouchsafed humanity, have but voluntaries among the slaves of the Stagnate Globe

2. Certainty grounded on demonstration

So you arrive at truth, though not at science. Bu.

3. Art attained by precepts, or built principles.

Science perfects genius, and moderates that of the fancy which cannot contain itself within bounds of reason. Dryden.

4. Any art or species of knowledge.

No science doth make known the first principle whereon it buildeth; but they are always taken plain and manifest in themselves, or as proved granted already, some former knowledge has made them evident. Locke.

Whatever we may learn by them, we learn

according to the manner of natural science which mere discourse of wit and reason leadeth to

Locke.

I present you with a new

Cunning in music and the mathematics.

To instruct her fully in those sciences. Shaksp.

5. One of the seven liberal arts, grammar rhetorick, logick, arithmetick, music geometry, astronomy.

Good sense, which only is the gift of heaven.

And, though no science, fairly worth the seven. Pope.

SCIENTIAL. adj. [from science.] Pro ducing science.

From the tree her step she turn'd;

But first low reverence done, as to the power

That dwelt within; whose presence had influ'd about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Shakespeare.

3. A pensile candlestick, generally with a looking-glass to reflect the light.

Golden sconces hang upon the walls.

To light the costly suppers and the halls. Dryden.

Triumphant Umbriel, on a sconce's height,

Clapp'd his glad wings, and sat to view the fight. Pope.

Put candles into sconces. Swift.

4. A mullet, or fine.

To SCONCE. v. a. [A word used in the universities, and derived plausibly by Skinner, whose etymologies are generally rational, from jeonice, as it signifies the head; to jeonice being to fix a fine on any one's head.] To mullet; to fine. A low word, which ought not to be retained.

Scorp. n. f. [Scorpe, Dutch.]

1. A kind of large ladle; a vessel with a long handle used to throw out liquor.

What, all my pretty chickens and their dam At one fell swoop? Shakespeare.

To SCOP. v. a. [schopen, Dutch.]

1. To lade out.

As by the brook he flood, He scopp'd the water from the crystal flood. Dryden.

2. This word seems to have not been understood by Theophrastus.

Melt'd Alpine snows

The mountain rills run till those simple fountains Of water scopp'd among the hollow rocks. Thomson.

3. To empty by lading.

If some penurious source by chance appear'd Scanty of waters, when you scopp'd it dry, And offer'd the full helmet up to Cato, Did he not dash th' untasted moisture from him? Addison.

4. To carry off, so as to leave the place hollow.

A spectator would think this circular mount had been actually scopp'd out of that hollow space. Spectator.

Her forefeet are broad, that she may scopp away much earth at a time. Addison.

To his head eyes, that in his forehead glind, Take a full moon, or a broad humbled shield, A tork that we dextrously applied,

Whil' in the spacious socket turning round, Scopp'd out the big round jelly from its orb. Addison.

5. To cut into hollows or depth.

Whether or part of the album they scopp'd, it has an influence on all the rest, for the scopp immediately works the whole bottom to a level. Addison.

England now is left
To tug and scramble, and to part by th' teeth
The unwearied of proud swelling state.

Shakspeare.

Of other care they little reck'ning make,
Than how to scramble at the treasurer's feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest. Milton.
It is not to be supposed, that, when such a tree was shaking, there would be no scrambling for the fruit.

They must have scrambled with the wild benefits for crabs and nuts. Ray.

2. To climb by the help of the hands; as, he scrambled up that rock.

SCRAMBLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. eager contest for something, in which one endeavours to get it before another.

As they were in the middle of their gambols, somebody threw a handful of apples among them,
that set them presently together by the ears upon the scramble. L'Estrange.

Because the desire of money is constantly almost every where the same, its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enhances its price, and increases the scramble. Locke.

2. Act of climbing by the help of the hands.

SCRAMBLER. n. f. [from scramble.]

1. One that scrambles.

All the little scramblers after fame fall upon him.

Addison.

2. One that climbs by help of the hands.

TO SCRAMBLE. v. a. [schranzler, Dutch.]

To grind somewhat crackling between the teeth. The Scots retain it.

SCRAMBLE. adj. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor any other example.] Vile; worthless. Perhaps grating by the sound.

When they lift, their lean and flabby fongs
Grate on their scramble pipes of wretched straw.

Milton.

SCRAP. n. f. [from scrape, a thing scraped or rubbed off.]

1. A small particle; a little piece; a fragment.

It is an unaccountable vanity to spend all our time raking into the scraps and imperfect remains of former ages, and neglecting the clearer notices of our own. Glanville.

Trencher equires spend their time in hopping from one great man's table to another's, only to pick up scraps and intelligence. L'Estrange.

Language are to be learned only by reading and talking, and not by scraps of authors got by heart. Locke.

No rag, no scrap, of all the beau, or wit,
That once so flatter'd, and that once so writ. Pope.

I can never have too many of your letters. I am sorry at every scrap of paper lost. Pope.

2. Crumb; small particles of meat left at the table.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One bred of ulnas, and foster'd with cold dillies,
With scraps of th' court, is no contract. Shakspeare.
The attendants puffa out beyond her bounds,
for th' own scraps and advantage. Bacon.

On bones, on scraps of dogs let me be fed,
My limbs uncover'd, and expos'd my head
To bleak & colds. Granville.

What has he else to bait his traps,
Or bring his vermin in, but scraps?

The offals of a church district,
A hungry vicarage at best. Swift.

3. A small piece of paper. This is properly scrap.

Programs with thousand bits the scrap unseen,
And silent tells a king, or buys a queen. Pope.

TO SCRAPE. v. a. [scrapen, Saxon; skrappen, Dutch; fajrcepitug, Erse.]

1. To deprive of the surface by the light action of a sharp instrument, used with the edge almost perpendicular.

These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed.

2. To take away by scraping; to erase.

They shall destroy the walls, and I will scrape her dust, and make her like the top of a rock. Ezekiel.

Bread for a toast lay on the coals; and, if toasted quite through, scrape off the burnt side, and serve it up. Swift.

3. To act upon any surface with a harsh noise.

The chiming clocks to dinner call;
A hundred footsteps scrape the marble hall. Pope.

4. To gather by great efforts, or perfunctory or trifling diligence.

Let the government be ruined by his avarice, if by avarice he can scrape together so much as to make his peace. South.

Unhappy those who hunt for a party, and scrape together out of every author all those things only which favour their own tenets. Watts.

TO SCRAPE. v. n.

1. To make a harsh noise.

2. To play ill on a fiddle.

3. To make an awkward bow.

4. TO SCRAPE Acquaintance. A low phrase. To curry favour, or insinuate into one's familiarity; probably from the scrapes or bows of a flatterer.

SCRAPE. n. f. [scrap, Swedish.]

1. Difficulty; perplexity; distress. This is a low word.

2. The found of the foot drawn over the floor.

3. A bow.

SCRAPER. n. f. [from scrape.]

1. Instrument with which any thing is scraped.

Never clean your shoes on the scraper, but in the entry, and the scraper will last the longer. Swift

2. A miser; a man intent on getting money; a scrape-penny.

Be thrifty, but not covetous; therefore give Thy need, thine honour, and thy friend his due:
Never was scraper brave man. Get to live;
Then live, and use it; else it is not true
That thou hast gotten it surely, use alone
Makes money not a contemptible stone. Ilchester

3. A vile siddler.

Out! ye sempiternal scrapers. Collier.
Have wild hours or dolphins the least emotion at the most elaborate strains of your modern scrapers, all which have been tamed and humanized by ancient musicians? Arbuthnot.

SCRAT. n. f. [scrat, Saxon.] A herniaphrodite. Skinner. Junius.

TO SCRATCH. v. a. [kratzen, Dutch.]

1. To tear or mark with slight incisions ragged and uneven.

The lab'ring swain
Scratch'd with a rake a furrow for his grain,
And cover'd with his hand the shallow seed again. Dryden

A sort of small sand-coloured stones, so hard as to scratch glass. Grew.

2. To tear with the nails.

How can I tell but that his talons may Yet scratch my son, or rend his tender hand? Fairy Queen.

I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. Shakspeare.

I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

—Keep your ladyship still in that mind; so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predestinate scratcht face.

—Scratching could not make as worse, as twice such a face as yours were. Shakspeare.

Scots are like witches, doing what you say,
Scratch till the blood runs, they'll not hurt you then.

To wish that there were nothing but such dull tame things in the world, that will neither bite nor scratch, is as childish as to wish there were no fire in nature. More.

Unhand me, or I'll scratch your face; Dryden.

3. To wound slightly.

4. To hurt slightly with any thing pointed or keen.

Daphne, roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds. Shakspeare.

5. To rub with the nails.

Francis Confield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented to signify his name St. Pro-cers, with a friary cowl in a corn field. Camden.

Other mechanical helps Arcturus uses to procure sleep, particularly the scratching of the temples and the ears. Arbuthnot.

Be mankind, when invention fails,
To scratch your head, and bite your nails. Swift.

6. To write or draw awkwardly.

If any of their labourers can scratch out a pamphlet, they desire no wit, style, or argument. Swift.

SCRATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An incision ragged and shallow.

The coarse file cuts deep, and makes deep scratches in the work; and before you can take out those deep scratches with your finer cut files, those places where the ridings were when your work was forged, may become dents to your hammer dents. Mason.

The smaller the particles of those substances are,
the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton.

2. Laceration with the nails.

Their nails with scratches shall deform my breast,
I let by my look or colour be express'd
The mark of aught high-born, or ever better dress'd. Prior.

3. A slight wound.

The valiant hawk turning on her with open jaws,
She gave him such a thrust through his breast, that all the lion could do was with his open paw to tear off the mantle and sleeve of Zulmaine, with a little scratch rather than a wound. Sidney.

Heav'n forbid a shallow scratch should drive
The prince of Wales from such a bold as this. Shakspeare.

SCRATCHER. n. f. [from scratch.] He that scratches.

SCRATCHES. n. f. Cracked ulcers or scabs in a horse's foot. Ainslie.

when scratchingly the wheels about after a mouse. Sincy.

SCR. IV. n. f. [Irish and Erse.] Surface of scurf.

Nether should that odious custom be allowed, of cutting scrows, which is laying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches. Swift.

TO SCRAWL. v. a. [I suppose to be corrupted from scrabble.] To draw or mark irregularly or clumsily.

Perute my leaves through ev'ry part,
And think thou dost thy owner's heart,
Scrawl'd o'er with trifles thus, and quite
As hard, as senseless, and as light. Swift.

TO SCRAWL. v. n.

1. To write unskilfully and inelegantly.

Think not your verses sterling,
Though with a golden pen you scrawl,
And scribble in a Berlin. Swift.

2. [from crawl.] To creep like a reptile. Ainsw.

SCRAWL. n. s. [from the verb.] Unskillful and inelegant writing.
The left hand will make such a scrawl, that it will not be legible. Arbutnot.
Mr. Wychely, hearing from me how welcome his letter would be, writ to you, in which I inserted my scrawl. Pope.

SCRAWLER. n. s. [from scrawl.] A clumsy and inelegant writer.

SCRAY. n. s. [hirundo marina.] A bird called a sea-swallow. Ainsw. Bailey.

SCREABLE. adj. [scriabilis, Lat.] That may be spit out. Bailey.

To SCRAK. v. n. [properly creak, or shreek, from skrige, Danish.] To make a shrill or loud noise. Bailey.

To SCREAM. v. n. [from scree, Saxon.]
1. To cry out shrilly, as in terror or agony.
Soon a whirlwind rose around,
And from afar he heard a screaming sound
As of a dame distress'd, who cried for aid,
And all'd with loud laments the secret shade. Dryden.
The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky. Dryden.
If chance a mouse creeps in her sight,
Can finely counterfeit a fright;
So sweetly screams, if it comes near her,
She ravishes all hearts to hear her. Swift.

2. To cry shrilly.
I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry. Shakespeare.

SCREAM. n. s. [from the verb.] A shrill, quick, loud cry of terror or pain.
Our chimnies were blown down; and, as they fell,
Lamenting heard i' the air, strange screams of death
Then flash'd the livid lightning from her eyes,
And screams of horror rend'd the astonished skies. Pope.

To SCREECH. v. n. [skriaku, to cry, Hindick.]
1. To cry out as in terror or anguish.
Screeching is an appetite of expelling that which suddenly strikes the spirits. Bacon.

2. To cry as a night owl: thence called a screechowl.

SCREECH. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Cry of horror and anguish.
2. Harsh horrid cry.
The birds obscene, that nightly flock'd to taste,
With hollow screeches fled from the dunce's seat;
And ravenous dogs, allur'd by scented blood,
And starving wolves, ran howling to the wood. Pope.

SCREECHOWL. n. s. [screech and owl.]
An owl that hoots in the night, and whose voice is supposed to betoken danger, misery, or death.
Deep night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screechows cry, and bawdies howl. Shakespeare.
Let him, that will a screechowl say be call'd,
Go into Troy, and say there, Hector's dead. Shakespeare.
By the screechowl's dismal note,
By the black night-raven's throat,
I charge thee, Hob. Drayton.
Jupiter, though he had jogg'd the balance to weigh down Turnus, sent the screechowl to discourage him. Dryden.
Sooner shall screechows bark in sunny day,
Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love. Gay.

SCREEN. n. s. [ecra, French.]

1. Any thing that affords shelter or concealment.
Now near enough: your heavy screens throw down,
And show like those you are. Shakespeare.
Some ambitious men form as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy. Bacon.
Our people, who transport themselves, are settled in those interjacent tracts, as a screen against the insults of the savages. Swift.
My juniors by a year,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd, to stand between;
The screen remov'd, their hearts are trembling. Swift.

2. Any thing used to exclude cold or light.
When there is a screen between the candle and the eye, yet the light passeth to the paper whereon one writeth. Bacon.
One speaks the glory of the British queen,
And one describes a charming Indian screen. Pope.
Ladies make their old clothes into patchwork for screens and stools. Swift.

3. A riddle to sift fang.

To SCREEN. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shelter; to conceal; to hide.
Back'd with a ridge of hills,
That screen'd the fruits of th' earth, and seats of men,
From cold septentrion blasts. Milton.
A good magistrate's revenue of state screens him from the dangers which he is incur for the sake of it. Atterbury.
This gentle deed shall fairly be set foremost,
To screen the wild escapades of lawless passion. Rowe.

2. [cerno, cerni, Lat.] To sift; to riddle.
Let the cases be filled with natural earth, taken the first half spit, from just under the turf of the best pasture-ground, mixed with one part of very mellow soil screened. Evelyn.

SCREW. n. s. [scroev, Dut. estrou, Fr.]
One of the mechanical powers, which is defined a right cylinder cut into a furrowed spiral: of this there are two kinds, the male and female; the former being cut convex, so that its threads rise outwards; but the latter channelled on its concave side, so as to receive the former. Quincy.
The screw is a kind of wedge, that is multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vertex at one end of it. Wilkins.
After your apples are ground, commit them to the screw press, which is the best. Mortimer.

To SCREW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To turn or move by a screw.
Some, when the press, by utmost vigour screw'd,
Has drain'd the pulpy mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse. Philips.

2. To fasten with a screw.
We fast!
But screw your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail. Shakespeare.
To screw your lock on the door, make wide holes, big enough to receive the shank of the screw. Mason.

3. To deform by contortions.
Sometimes a violent laughter screw'd his face,
And sometimes ready tears dropp'd down apace. Cowley.
He screw'd his face into a harden'd snile,
And said, Sebastian knew to govern slaves. Dryden.
With screw'd face, and doleful whine, they ply you with senseless harangues against human inventions on the one hand, and loud outcries for a further reformation on the other. South.
Let others screw their hypocrite face,
She shews her grief in a sincere place. Swift.

4. To force; to bring by violence.
He resolv'd to govern by subaltern ministers, who screw'd up the pins of power too high. Hovel.
No discourse can be, but they will try to turn the tide, and draw it all into their own channel; or they will screw in here and there some intimations of what they said or did. Government of the Tongue.

The rents of land in Ireland, since they have been so enormously raised and screw'd up, may be computed to be about two millions. Swift.

5. To squeeze; to press.

6. To oppress by extortion.
Our country landlords, by unmerciful screwing and racking their tenants, have already reduced the miserable people to a worse condition than the peasants in France. Swift.

SCREW TREE. n. s. [Sorbus, Lat.] A plant of the East and West Indies.

To SCRIBBLE. v. a. [scribo, scribere, Latin.]
1. To fill with artless or worthless writing.
How gird the sphere
With centrick and eccentric, scribbled o'er Cycle and picycle, orb in orb. Milton.

2. To write without use or elegance; as he scribbled a pamphlet.

To SCRIBBLE. v. n. To write without care or beauty.
If a man should affirm, that an ape, casual meeting with pen, ink, and paper, and talking scribble, did happen to write exactly the Leviathan of Hobbes, would any honest believe such a story? And yet he can easily scribble things as meretricious as that. Beattie.
If Mævius scribble in Apollo's spite,
There are who judge still worse than he can write. Pope.
Leave flattery to fulsome dedicators,
Whom, when they praise, the world believes a more Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er. Pope.

SCRIBBLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Worthless writing.
By solemnly endeavouring to countenance conjectures, I might be thought dogmatical in scribble. Pope.
If it struck the present taste, it was soon transferred into the phys and current scribbles of the week, and became an addition to our language. Swift.

SCRIBBLER. n. s. [from scribble.] A petty author; a writer without worth.
The most common writers are the arrantest scribblers, and in so much talking the tongue runs before the wit. Leigham.
The actors represent such things as they are capable, by which they and the scribbler may get their living. Druid.
The scribbler, pinch'd with hunger, writes to die,
And to your genius must conform his line. Grass.
To affirm he had cause to apprehend the same treatment with his father, is an improbable scandal flung upon the nation by a few bigotted French scribblers. Swift.
Nobody was concerned or surprised, if this scribbler was proved a dunce. Letter to Pope's Duacod.

SCRIBE. n. s. [scribe, Fr. scriba, Lat.]
1. A writer.
Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho!
His love to Antony. Shakespeare.
My master, being the scribe to himself, should write the letter. Shakespeare.
We are not to wonder, if he thinks not fit to make any perfect and unerring scribes. Grev.
The following letter comes from some notable young female scribe. Spectator.

2. A publick notary. Ainsworth.

SCRIMER. n. s. [scrimeur, Fr.] A gladiator; a fencingmaster. Not in use.
The scrimers of their nation,
He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you oppos'd them. Shakespeare.

SCRINE. n. s. [scrinium, Lat.] A place in which writings or curiosities are deposited.

Helpless, I lay down
My weaker senses to perform my will.
Lay forth, out of these common things, some
The antique rolls which show his hidden skill.
Fairy Queen.

CRIP. n. f. [scripps, Islandic]
A final bag; a fatchel.
Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat, though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage. Shakespeare.
He'd in requital ope his leathern scrip,
And drew me strings of a thousand names.
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.
[from scriptio, Latin, as it seems.] A schedule; a small writing.
Call them man by man, according to the scrip.
Shakespeare.

Bills of exchange cannot pay our debts abroad,
All scripts of paper can be made current coin. Locke.
SCRIPTAGE. n. f. [from scrip.] That which is contained in a scrip. DiG.
SCRIPTORY. adj. [scriptorius, Lat.] Written; not orally delivered. Swift.
SCRIPTURAL. adj. [from scriptura.] Contained in the Bible; biblical.
Creatures, the scriptures use of that word determines sometimes to men. Atterbury.
SCRIPTURE. n. f. [scriptura, Latin.]

1. Writing.
It is not only remembered in many scriptures,
but famous for the death and overthrow of Judas.
Raleigh.

2. Sacred writing; the Bible.
With us there is never any time bestowed in divine service, without the reading of a great part of the holy scripture, which we account a thing most necessary. Hooker.

The devil can cite scriptures for his purpose:
An evil soul producing holy witness
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek. Shakespeare.
There is not any action which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the scripture will give him a clear precept, or prohibition, for it. South.
Forbear any discourse of other spirits, till his reading the scriptures history put him upon that enquiry. Locke.

Scripture proof was never the talent of these men, and 'tis no wonder they are foiled. Atterbury.
Why are scripture maxims put upon us, without taking notice of scripture examples, that he crosses them? Atterbury.

The Author of nature and the scriptures has expressly enjoined, that he who will not work shall not eat. Secd.

SCRIVENER. n. f. [scrivano, Latin.]

1. One who draws contracts.
We'll pass the business privately and well:
Send for your daughter by your servant here,
My boy shall fetch the scrivener. Shakespeare.

2. One whose business is to place money at interest.

How happy in his low degree,
Who leads a quiet country life,
And from the griping scrivener free! Dryden.

I am reduced to beg and borrow from scriveners and utters, that suck the heart and blood. Arbutnot.

SCROFULA. n. f. [from scrofa, Latin, a sow, as scrofa.] A deprivation of the humours of the body, which breaks out in sores, commonly called the kingevil.
It murther in the milk disposes to conagulation, it produces a scrofula. Weyman.

SCROFULOUS. adj. [from scrofula.] Diseased with the scrofula.

Scrofulous persons can never be duly nourished;
for such as have tumours in the parotides often have them in the pancreas and melatery. Arbutnot.
English consumptions generally proceed from a scrofulous disposition. Arbutnot.

What would become of the race of men, the next year, if we had nothing to trust to, but the scrofulous consumptive production, which is but a wit and pleasure? Swift.

SCROLL. n. f. [supposed by Mingew to be corrupted from roll; by Skinner derived from an escrouelle given by the heralds: whence parchment, wrapped up into a resembling form, has the same name. It may be observed, that a gaoler's list of prisoners is escrow.] A writing wrapped up.

His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls,
And old records from ancient times deriv'd;
Some made in books, some in long parchment
scrolls,
That were all worm-eaten, and full of canker holes.
Spenser.

We'll add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.
Shakespeare.

Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit through all Athens to play in our interlude. Shakespeare.

A Numidian priest, bellowing out certain superstitious charms, cast divers scrolls of paper on each side the way, wherein he curied and banned the christians. Knolles.

He drew forth a scroll of parchment, and delivered it to our foremost man. Bacon.

Such follow him, as shall be register'd;
Part good, part bad: of bad the longer scroll.
Milton.

With this epistolary scroll,
Receive the partner of my inmost soul. Prior.
Yet, if he wills, may change or spoil the whole;
May take you beautiful, my tick, it carry roll,
And burn it like an useless parchment scroll. Prior.

SCROYLE. n. f. [This word I remember only in Shakespeare: it seems derived from escrouelle, French, a scrofulous swelling;
as he calls a mean fellow a scab from his itch, or a patch from his raggedness.]
A mean fellow; a rascal; a wretch.

The scroyles of Angers flout you kings,
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre. King John.

To SCRUB. v. a. [scrubben, Dutch.] To rub hard with something coarse and rough.

Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw,
For an old grandam ape, when with a grace
She sits atiquat, and scrubs her leathern face. Dryd.
She never would lay aside the use of brooms and scrubbing brushes. Arbutnot.

Now Moll had whirl'd her mop with dext'rous arts,

Prepar'd to scrub the entry and the stairs. Swift.

SCRUB. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A mean fellow, either as he is supposed to scrub himself for the itch, or as he is employed in the mean offices of scouring away dirt.

2. Any thing mean or despicable.
With a dozen large vessels my vault shall be stor'd,
No little scrub joint shall come on my board. Swift.

3. A worn-out broom. Ainsworth.

SCRUBBED. } adj. [scrubbt, Danish.]
SCRUBBY. } Mean; vile; worthless;
dirty; sorry.

I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy, a little scrubbed boy,
No higher than thyself. Shakespeare.

The scrubbiest cur in all the pack
Can set the mastiff on your back. Swift.

The scene a wood, produc'd no more Than a few scrubby trees before. Swift.

SCRUFF. n. f. The same, I suppose, with scurf, by a metathesis usual in pronunciation.

SCRUPLE. n. f. [scrupule, French; seru-pulus, Latin.]

1. Doubt; difficulty of determination; perplexity: generally about minute
things.

Macedoff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul

Wip'd the black scruples, repell'd my thoughts
To your good truth. Shakespeare.

Nothing did more fill foreign nations with admiration of his succession, than the content of all estates of England for the receiving of the king without the least scruple, point, or question. Bacon.

For the matter of your confession, less be severe and serious; but yet to as it may be, without any inordinate anxiety, and unnecessary scruples, which only entangle the souls. Taylor.

Men make no scruple to conclude, that those professors, of whose knowledge they can find in themselves no original, were certainly, the impress of God and nature upon their minds, and not taught them by any one else. Locke.

2. Twenty grains; the third part of a drain.

Milk one ounce, oil of Nutriol a scruple, dash con-sistate the milk at the bottom, where the Nutriol goeth. Bacon.

3. Proverbially, any small quantity.

Nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence;
But, like a charity, goddets, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor. Shakespeare.

To SCRUPLE. v. n. [from the noun.]
To doubt, to hesitate.

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge; not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charms. Milton.

SCRUPLE. n. f. [from scruple.] A doubter; one who has scruples.

The scruples which many publick ministers would make of the weakness of parents to have their children baptized, forced such questioned parents, who did not believe the necessity of having their children baptized by such scruplers, to carry their children unto other ministers. Grout.

SCRUPULOSITY. n. f. [from scrupulous.]

1. Doubt; minute and nice doubtfulness.

The one fortily warn'd to take heed, that scrup-ulosity did not make them rigorous in giving unad-vised sentence against their brethren which were free; the other, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty and freedom to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous. Hooker.

So careful, even to scrupulosity, were they to keep their sabbath, that they must not only have a time to prepare them for that, but a further time also to prepare them for their very preparations. South.

2. Fear of acting in any manner; tenderness of conscience.

The first scruple is looked on with horror; but when they have made the breach, their scrupulosity soon retires. Decay of Piety.

SCRUPULOUS. adj. [scrupuleux, French;
scrupulosus, Latin; from scruple.]

1. Nicely doubtful; hard to satisfy in determinations of conscience.

They warned them, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous. Hooker.

Some birds, inhabitants of the waters, whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days. Locke.

2. Given to objections; captious.

Equality of two domestic pow'rs Breeds scrupulous faction. Shakespeare.

3. Nice; doubtful.

As the cause of a war ought to be just, so the justice of that cause ought to be evident; not obscure, not scrupulous. Bacon.

4. Carefully; vigilant; cautious.

I have been the more scrupulous and wary, in regard the inferences from these observations are of importance. Woodward.

SCRUPULOUSLY. adv. [from scrupulous.]

Carefully; nicely; anxiously.

The duty consists not scrupulously in minutes and half hours. Taylor.
Henry v. manifestly derived his courage from his piety, and was scrupulously careful not to ascribe
the success of it to himself. Addison.

SCRU'PULOUSNESS. n. f. [from scrupulous.]
The state of being scrupulous.

SCRUTABLE. adj. [from scrutor, Latin.] Discoverable by inquiry.

Shall we think God to scrutable, or ourselves to penetrating, that none of his secrets can elude us?

Decay of Piety.

SCRUTA'TION. n. f. [scrutor, Latin.] Search; examination; inquiry. Diet.

SCRUTA'TOR. n. f. [scrutator, French;
from scrutor, Latin.] Inquirer; searcher;
examiner.

In process of time, from being a simple scrutator, an archdeacon became to have jurisdiction more amply. Ayliffe.

SCRUTINE'ER. n. f. [scrutator, Latin.]
A searcher; an examiner.

To SCRUTINIZE. } v. a. [from scrutiny.] To SCRUTINY. } To search; to examine.

The compromissarii should chuse according to the votes of such, whose votes they were obliged to scrutinize. Ayliffe.

SCRUTINIOUS. adj. [from scrutiny.] Cup-tious; full of inquiries. A word little used.

Age is froward, uneasy, scrutinious,
Hard to be pleas'd, and purblind. Denham

SCRUTINY. n. f. [scrutinium, Latin.] Inquiry; search; examination with nicety.

In the scrutinies for righteousness and judgment, when it is inquired whether such a person be a good man or no, the meaning is not, what does he believe or hope, but what he loves. Taylor.

I thought thee worth my nearer view
And narrower scrutiny, that I might learn
In what degree or measure thou art call'd
The Son of God. Milton.

They that have defanged exquisites and deep scruti-ning, have taken some one part of nature. Hale.

Their difference to measure, and to reach,
Reason well rectified must nature teach;
And these high scrutinies see subjects fit
For man's all-searching and enquiring wit. Denham.

We are admonish'd of want of charity towards others, and want of a christian scrutiny and examination into ourselves. L'Estrange.

When any argument of great importance is managed with that warmth which a serious conviction of it generally inspires, sometimes may, easily escape, even from a wary pen, which will not bear the test of a severe scrutiny. Atterbury.

These, coming not within the scrutiny of human senses, cannot be examined by them, or attested by any body. Locke.

SCRUTOIRE. n. f. [for scrutoire, or escritoire.] A case of drawers for writings.

I locked up these papers in my scrutoire, and my scrutoire came to be unlocked. Prior.

To SCRUZE. v. a. [perhaps from scree.]
This word, though now diluted by writers, is still preserved, at least in its corruption, to scrounge, in the London jargon.] To squeeze; to compress.

Though up he caught him 'twixt his pulsant
hands,
And having scrus'd out of his cation corse

The loathful life, now loos'd from vital bands,
Upon his shoulders carried him. Fairy Queen

To SCUD. v. n. [squttire, Italian; skutta, Swedish; skudur, switt, Islandick.] To slee; to run away with precipitation.

The vote was no sooner pass'd, but away they scudd'd to the next lake. L'Estrange.

The frighted satyrs, that in woods delight,
Now into plains with prick'd-up ears take flight;
And scudding thence, while they their horn-foot ply,
About their fires the little sylvens cry. Dryden.

Away the frighted spectre scuds,
And leaves my lady in the fuds. Swift.

To SCU'DLE. v. n. [from scud.] To run with a kind of affected haste or precipitation. A low word: commonly pronounced scuttle.

SCU'FFLE. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from shuffe.] A confused quarrel; a tumultuous broil.

His captain's heart,

In the scuffles of great fights, hath burst
The buckles on his breast. Shakspeare.

Avowed atheists, placing themselves in the seat of the scorner, take much pleasing diversion, by dending our eager scuffles about that which they think nothing. Decay of Piety.

The dog leaps upon the serpent, and tears it to pieces; but in the scuffle the cradle happened to be overturned. L'Estrange.

Popish missionaries mix themselves in these dark scuffles, and animate the mob to such outrages and intolts. Addison.

To SCU'FFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight confusedly and tumultuously.

I must confess I've seen, in former days,
The best knights in the world, and scuffled in some days. Drayton.

A gallant man had rather fight to great disad-vantage in the field, in an orderly way, than scuffle with an undisciplined rabble. King Charles.

To SCULK. v. n. [sculke, Danish.] To lurk in hiding places; to lie close.

It has struck on a sudden into such a reputation, that it turns any longer to sculk, but owns itself
publickly. Government of the Tongue.

Fearing to be seen, within a bed
Of celestials he conceal'd his wily head;
There sculk'd till afternoon, and watch'd his time. Dryden.

My prophets and my sophists finish'd here
Their civil efforts of the verbal war;

Not to my rabbins and logicians yield;
Retiring still they combat, from the field
Of open arms unwilling they depart.

And sculk behind the subtlety of art. Prior.

No news of Plu! the bridegroom came,
And thought his bride had sculk'd for shame;
Because her sister us'd to lay
The girl had such a bashful way. Swift.

SCU'LLER. n. f. [from sculk.] A lurker;
one that hides himself for shame or mischief.

SCULL. n. f. [It is derived by Skinner
from shell, in some provinces called shell;
as testa, and teste, or tete, signify the head. Iye observes, more satisfactorily, that skola is in Islandick the skull of an animal.]

1. The bone which incases and defends the brain; the arched bope of the head.

Fractures of the skull are at all times very dangerous, as the brain becomes affected from the pressure. Sharp.

2. A small boat; a cockboat. [See SCU-LLER.]

3. One who rows a cockboat.
I like cauttif vile, that for misdeed
Rides with his face to ramp of ficed;
Or rowing scull, he's fain to love,
Look one way and another move. Hudibras

4. [see scule, Saxon, an assembly.] In Milton's style, a shoal or vast multitude of fish.

Each bay

With fry innumerable swarms, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave, in sculls that oft Blank the mid sea. Milton.

SCU'LLCAP. n. f. [scull and cap.]

1. A headpiece.

2. A nightcap.

SCU'LLER. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology. Skola is, in Islandick, a vessel; and escucille, in French, a dish.]

1. A cockboat; a boat in which there is but one rower.

Her foul already was congeal'd to fate,
And thir'ring in the lucky sculler's gate. Dryden.

They hire the sculler, and, when once aboard,
Grow lops and damn the climate like a lord. Pope.

2. One that rows a cockboat.

SCU'LLERY. n. f. [from skola, a vessel,
Islandick; or escucille, French, a dish.]

The place where common utensils, as kettles or dishes, are cleaned and kept.
Pyrcicus was famous for counterfeiting base things, as pitchers, a scullery, and letting rogues together by the ears. Pendemon.

SCU'LLION. n. f. [from escucille, French,
a dish.] The lowest domestic servant, that washes the kettles and the dishes in the kitchen.

I must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a-cursing like a very drab,
A scullion, fye upon 't! foh! about my brain. Shakspeare.

If the gentleman hath lain there, get the cow, the stable-mech, and the scullion, to stand in his way. Swi.

To SCULP. v. a. [sculpo, Latin; sculper, French.] To carve; to engrave. No in use.

O that the tenor of my just complaint
Were sculpt with steel on rocks of adamant! Shakspeare.

SCU'LP'TILE. adj. [sculptilis, Latin]
Made by carving.

In a silver medal is upon one side Moses bowed,
and on the reverse the commandment against scultile images. Brown.

SCU'LP'TOR. n. f. [sculptor, Lat. sculptor, French.] A carver; one who cuts wood or stone into images.

Thy shape's in every part
So clean, as might instruct the sculptor's art. Dryden.
The Latin poets give the epithets of tripudians and tristitum to the thunderbolt, from the sculptors and painters that lived before them, that had given it three forks. Addison.

SCU'LP'TURE. n. f. [sculptura, Latin,
sculpture, French.]

1. The art of carving wood, or hewing stone, into images.

Then sculpture and her sister arts revive,
Stones leap'd to form, and rocks began to live. Pope.

2. Carved work.

Not did there want Cornice or freeze with bossy sculptures graven. Shakspeare.

There too, in living sculpture, might be seen
The mad affection of the Cretan que n. Dryden.

3. The art of engraving on copper.

To SCU'LP'TURE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To cut; to engrave.

Gold, silver, ivory vases sculptur'd high,
There are who have not. Pope.

SCUM. n. f. [scume, French; schiuma, Italian; skum, Danish; schuym, Dutch.]

1. That which rises to the top of any liquor.

The rest had several offices assign'd;
Some to remove the scum as it did rise,
Others to bear the foam away did mind,
And others it to use according to his said. F. Queen.

The salt part of the water doth partly rise a scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sedi-

Gallies'd like scum, and settled to itself,
Self-foet and self-confund. Milton.

Away, ye scum,
That still rise upmost, when the nation boils. Dryden.

They mix a medicine, to foment their limbs
With scum that on the molten silver flows. Dryden.
2. The dross; the refuse; the recrement; that part which is to be thrown away.

There lived upon the coast of the Irish at all places, that ere long he had a mighty roy.
Some forty years ago, had we the very
of the world, such as their friends thought it an exceeding good gain to be discharged of.

Raleigh.

I told thee what would come all thy vapouring, hale scum.
The Scythian and Egyptian scum had almost run'd Rome.
You'll find, in these hereditary tales,
our ancestors the scum of broken jails.
The great and innocent are insulted by the scum and refuse of the people.
SCUM, v. a. [from the noun.] To clear off the scum: commonly written and spoken skim.

A second multitude
kroding each kind, and scum'd the bullock drofs.

Milton.

Hear, ye fullen pow'rs below;
Hear, ye talkers of the dead!
You that boiling cauldrons blow,
You that scum the molten lead!

Dryden and Lee's Edipus.

What corns swim upon the top of the brine,
scum off.
CUMBER, n. s. [from scum.] The dung of a fox.

Ainsworth.

CUMMER, n. s. [escumoir, French.] A vessel with which liquor is scummed:
commonly called a skimmer.

CUMPER Holes, n. s. [schoepen, Dutch, to draw off.] In a ship, small holes on the deck, through which water is carried into the sea. The leathers over those holes are called scupper leathers; and the nails with which they are fastened,
scupper nails.

Bailey.

The blood at scupper holes run out.
CURF, n. s. [crupf, Sax. skarfa, Islandick;
Aurf, Danish; skorf, Swedish; schorft,
Dutch.]

A kind of dry military scab.
Her crafty head was altogether bald,
And, as in hate of honourable eld,
Was overgrown with curf and filthy scald.

Fairy Queen.

The virtue of his hands
Was lost among Pachelus' sands,
Against whose torrent while he swims,
The golden curf peels off his limbs.

Swift.

A foil or stain adherent.
Then are they happy, when by length of time
The curf is worn away of each committed crime.
No speck is left.

Dryden.

Any thing sticking on the surface.
There stood a hill, whose grassy top Shone with a glossy curf.

Milton.

Upon the wing in a stone, the water boils; and at the same time are seen little flakes of curf rising up.

Addison.

SCURINESS, n. s. [from scurf.] The state of being scurfy.

SCURIL, adj. [scurilis, Lat.] Low;
mean; grossly opprobrious; lewdly jocose.

With him Patroclus,
Upon a lazy bed, the live-long day
Breaks scuril jets.

Shakespeare.

Nothing conduces more to letters than to examine the writings of the ancients, provided the places of judging and pronouncing against them be away; such as envy, bitterness, precipitation, impudence, and scuril scoffing.

Ben Jonson.

Thou mov'st me more by basely naming him,
Than thirty foul unnumber'd scuril taunts.

Dryden.

SCURILITY, n. s. [scurilité, Fr. scurri-las, Lat.] Grossness of reproach; lewd-ness of jocularity; mean buffoonery.

Good master Holofemes, purge; to it shall please you to abrogate scurility.
Hence scurility and profaneness, and reform
the licentious insolence of poets.

Dryden.

SCURIOUS, adj. [scurilis, Lat.] Grossly opprobrious; using such language as only the licence of a buffoon can warrant; lewdly jocular; vile; low.

Scurious and more than satirical immodesty.

Hooker.

Let him approach singing. Forewarn him that he use no scurious words in 's times. Shakespeare.
How often is a person, whose intentions are to do good by the works he publishes, treated in as scurious a manner as if he were an enemy to mankind?

Addison.

Their characters have been often treated with the utmost barbarity and injustice by scurious and enraged orators.

Swift.

SCURIOUSLY, adv. [from scurious.]

With gross reproach; with low buffoonery; with lewd merriment.

Such men there are, who have written scuri-ously against me, without any provocation.

Dryden.

It is barbarous incivility, scuriously to sport with that which others count religion.

Tillotson.

SCURIOUSNESS, n. s. [from scurious.]

Scurility; baseness of manners.

SCURVILY, adv. [from scurvy.] Vilely; basely; coarsely. It is seldom used but in a ludicrous sense.

Look in your glass now,
And see how scurvily that countenance shews;
You would be loth to own it.

Ben Jonson.

This affects the whole complexion of an action, that would otherwise look but very scurvily, and makes it perfect.

South.

The clergy were never more learned, or so scurivily treated.

Swift.

SCURVY, n. s. [from scurf. This word was, I believe, originally an adjective.]
A distemper of the inhabitants of cold countries, and amongst those such as inhabit marshy, fat, low, moist soils, near stagnating water, fresh or salt; invading chiefly in the winter such as are sedentary, or live upon salted or smoked flesh and fish, or quantities of unfermented farinaceous vegetables, and drink bad water.

Arbutnot.

SCURVY, adj. [from scurf, scurfy, scurvy.]

1. Scabbed; covered with scabs; diseased with the scurvy.

Whatever may be scurvy or scabbed.

Iviticus.

2. Vile; bad; forty; worthless; contemptible; offensive.

I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler.

Shakespeare.

This is a very scurvy tune to sing to a man's funeral.

Shakespeare.

He spoke scurvy and provoking terms

Against your honour.

Shakespeare.

A crane, which is but scurvy meat, lays but two eggs.

Chapman.

It would be convenient to prevent the excess of drink, with that scurvy custom of taking tobacco.

Swift.

SCURVYGRASS, n. s. [scurvy and grass;
cochlearia, Latin.] The plant spoonwort.

Miller.

SCURSES, for excuscs.

I fluted him away.

And laid good scurcs on your ecstasy.

Shakespeare.

SCUT, n. s. [skott, Islandick.] The tail of those animals whose tails are very short,
as a hare.

In the hare it is averily seated, and in its distention inclines unto the coccyx or scut.

Brown.

He fled to earth, but first it cost him dear;

He left his scut behind, and half an ear.

Swift.

SCUTCHEON, n. s. [scaccione, Italian, from scutum, Lat.] The shield represented in heraldry; the ensigns armorial of a family. See ESCUTCHEON.

And thereto had the that scutcheon of her desires supported by certain badly diligent ministers.

Sidney.

Your scutcheons, and your signs of conquest, shall hang in what place you please.

Shakespeare.

Honour is a meer scutcheon.

Shakespeare.

The chiefs about their necks the scutcheons wore,

With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er.

Dryden.

SCUTELLATED, adj. [scutella, Latin.]

Divided into small surfaces.

It seems part of the scutellated bone of a surgeon, being flat, of a porous or cellular constitution.

Woodward.

SCUTIFORM, adj. [scutiformis, Latin.]

Shaped like ashield.

SCUTLE, n. s. [scutella, Latin; scutell, Celtick. Ainsworth]

1. A wide shallow basket, so named from a dish or platter which it resembles in form.

A scuttle or skem to rid soil fro' the corn.

The earth and stones they are tan to carry from under their feet in scuttles and baskets.

Hawthth.

2. A small grate.

To the hole in the door have a small scuttle, to keep in what mice are there.

Mortimer.

3. [from scud.] A quick pace; a short run;

a pace of affected precipitation. This is properly scuddle.

She went with an easy scuttle out of the shop.

Spekater.

TO SCUTTLER, v. n. [from scud or scuddle.]

To run with affected precipitation.

The old fellow scuttled out of the room.

Arbutnot.

TO SDEIGN, v. a. [Sperfer, Sægnare, Italian; Millon, for dydain.]

Lifted up to high.

Milton.

I sdeign'd (subject.)

SDEIGNFUL, adj. [Contracted for dydainful.]

They now, puff up with sdeignful insolence,

Despise the brood of blessed sapience.

Spenser.

SEA, n. s. [æ, Sax. ſæ, or zæ, Dutch.]

1. The ocean; the water, opposed to the land.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather Thy multitudinous ſea meannade,

Making the green one red.

Shakespeare.

The rivers run into the ſea.

Cicero.

He made the ſea and all that is therein.

Exodus.

So do the winds and thunders cleanse the air

So working ſea settle and purge the wine.

Dantes.

Amphibious, between ſea and land,

Milton.

The river horse.

Some Leviathan,

Haply flum'ring on the Norway foam,

The pilot of some small night-founder'd ſhip

Deeming some island, oft as seamen tell,

With fixed anchor in his *ſea*ly mind,

Moor by his side under the lee, while night

Invests the ſea.

Milton.

Small fragments of shells, broken by storms on some shores, are used for manuring of ſea land.

Woodward.

They put to ſea with a fleet of three hundred ſail.

Arbutnot.

Sea racing dolphins are train'd for our motion,

Moony tides swelling to roll us ashore.

Dryden.

But like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves

The raging tempest and the rising waves,

Propp'd on himself he stands: his solid sides

Walk off the ſea weeds, and the sounding tides.

Dryden.

The ſea could not be much narrower than it is,
without a great loss to the world.

Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the ſea,

High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his train,

While Argos saw her kindred trees

Descend from Pelion to the main.

Pope.

2. A collection of water; a lake.

By the ſea of Galilee.

Matthew.

3. Proverbially for any large quantity.

That ſea of blood, which hath in Ireland been barbarously shed, is enough to drown in eternal infamy and misery the malicious author and instigator of its effusion. King Charles.

SEA

4. Any thing rough and tempestuous.

To sorrow abandon'd, but worse felt within,
And in a troubled sea of passion tost. Milton.

5. Half SEAS over. Half drunk.

The whole magistracy was pretty well disguised before I gave 'em the slip. our friend the alderman was half seas over before the bonfire was out. Spektator.

SEA is often used in composition, as will appear in the following examples.

SEABAR. n. f. [from sea and bar; hirundo piscis, Latin.] The sea swallow.

SEABEAT. adj. [sea and beat.] Dashed by the waves of the sea.

The sovereign of the seas he blames in vain,
That one sea-leat will to sea again. Spenser.
Darkness cover'd o'er

The face of things: along the feebent shore
Satiate we slept. Pope.

SEABOAT. n. f. [sea and boat] Vessel capable to bear the sea.

Shipwrecks were occasioned by their ships being bad sea-boats, and themselves but indifferent sea-men. Arbuthnot.

They flaily refused to sail their bonnets by the famous of those towns, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by the better enabled seafarers. Cruik.

A wandering merchant, he frequents the main,
Some mean seafarer in pursuit of gain;
Stedious of freight, in unval trade well skill'd,
But dreads the athletic labours of the field. Pope.

SEAFARING. adj. [sea and farer.] Travel-ling by sea.

My wife taken'd him unto a small spare mast,
Such as seafaring men provide for storms. Shakespeare.

It was death to divert the ships of seafaring people, against their will, to other uses than they were appointed. Arbuthnot.

SEAFENSEL. The same with SAMPHIRE.

SEAFIGHT. n. f. [sea and fight.] Battle of ships; battle on the sea.

Sea-fights have been often fatal to the war; but this is when princes sit up their rest upon the battles. Racon.

It our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, we should, in the quietest retirement, be less able to sleep than in the middle of a sea-fight. Locke.

This fleet they recruited with two hundred sail, whereof they lost ninety-three in a sea-fight. Arbuthnot.

SEA

SEAFOWL. n. f. [sea and fowl.] Birds that live at sea.

The bills of curlews, and many other seafowls are very long, to enable them to hunt for the worms. Dryden.

A seafowl properly represents the passage of a deity over the sea.

A length of ocean and unbounded sky,
Which scarce the seafowl in a year o'er-ry. Pope.

SEA

She, looking out,
Beholds the fleet, and hears the seamen shout.
Dryden.

Seamen, through dismal storms, are wont
To pass the oyster-breeding Hellespont.
Evelyn.
Æneid order'd

Stately tomb, whose top a trumpet bore,
Soldier's falchion, and a seaman's oar;
Was his friend interr'd.
Dryden.

By undergoing the hazards of the sea, and the company of common seamen, you make it evident you will refuse no opportunity of rendering yourself useful.
Dryden.

Had they applied themselves to the increase of their strength by sea, they might have had the most fleet, and the most seamen, of any state in Europe.
Addison.

Mermaid; the male of the mermaid.
Seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have a warm blood and entrails of a hog, not to mention mermaids or seamen.
Locke.

SEAMARK. n. f. [sea and mark.] Point or conspicuous place distinguished at sea, and serving the mariners as directions of their course.

Those white rocks,
Which all along the southern seas coast lay,
Threat'ning unheeded wreck and rash decay,
He for his safety's sake his seamark made;
And nam'd it Albion.
Fairy Queen

Though you do see me weapon'd,
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
The very seamark of my utmost sail.
Shakespeare.

They were executed at divers places upon the seacoast, for seamarks, or light-houses, to teach Perkins's people to avoid the coast.
Bacon.

They are remembered with a brand of infamy set upon them, and set as seamarks for those who abuse them to avoid.
Dryden.

The fault of others sway
He set as seamarks for himself to shun.
Dryden.

SEAW. n. f. [sea and new.] A fowl that frequents the sea.

An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals, and orks, and seaw clang.

found on the shore.

Seashells are great improvers of flour or cold land.
Mortimer.

SEASHORE. n. f. [sea and shore.] The coast of the sea.

That seashore where no more world is found,
But foaming billows breaking on the ground.
Dryden.

Fournier gives an account of an earthquake in Peru, that reached three hundred leagues along the seashore.
Burnet.

To say a man has a clear idea of any quantity, without knowing how great it is, is as reasonable as to say he has the positive idea of the number of the sands on the seashore.
Locke.

SEASICK. adj. [sea and sick.] Sick, as new voyagers on the sea.

She began to be much seasick, extremity of weather continuing.
Shakespeare.

Barbarossa was not able to come on shore, for that he was, as they said, seasick, and troubled with an ague.
Knolles.

In love's voyage, nothing can offend;
Women are never seasick.
Dryden.

Weary and seasick, when in thee confin'd,
Now, for thy safety, cares distract my mind.
Swift.

SEASIDE. n. f. [sea and side.] The edge of the sea.

Their camels were without number, as the sand
by the seaside.

These disembarking on the green seaside,
We land our cattle, and the spoil divide.
Pope.

SEASURGEON. n. f. [sea and surgeon.] A chirurgian employed on shipboard.

My design was to help the seasurgeon.
Walsen.

SEASURROUNDED. adj. [sea and surround.]
Encircled by the sea.

To seasurrounded realms the gods assign Small tracts of fertile lawn, the best to man.
Pope.

SEATERM. n. f. [sea and term.] Word of art used by the seamen.

I agree with you in your censure of the seaterms
in Dryden's Virgil, because no terms of art, or cant words, suit the majesty of epic poetry.
Pope.

SEAWATER. n. f. [sea and water.] The salt water of the sea.

By digging of pits in the sea-shore, he did frustrate the laborious works of the enemies, which had turned the seawater upon the wells of Alexandria.
Bacon.

I bathed the member with seawater.
Wytman.
Seawater has many gross, rough, and earthy particles in it, as appears from its saltness; whereas fresh water is more pure and unmixt.
Broom.

wood that grows in the sea.

SEAL. n. f. [phoca; peol, pele, Saxon;
seel, Danish.] The sea-calf.

The seal or toyle is in make and growth not unlike a pig, ugly faced, and footed like a molewarp: he delighteth in music, or any loud noise, and thereby is trained to shew himself above water: they also come on land.
Cicero.

An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals, and orks, and seaw clang.
Milton.

SEAL. n. f. [sigel, Saxon; sigillum, Lat.]

1. A stamp engraved with a particular impression, which is fixed upon the wax that closes letters, or affixed as a testimony.

The king commands you
To render up the great seal.
Shakespeare.

If the organs of perception, like wax overhardened with cold, will not receive the impression of the seal;
or, like wax of a temper too soft, will not hold it;
or, like wax of a temper too soft, will not hold it, but the seal not applied with a sufficient force to make a clear impression: in any of these cases the print left by the seal will be obscure.
Locke.

The same his grandfire wore about his neck
In three seal rings; which after, melted down, Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown.
Pope.

2. The impression made in wax.

Till thou canst read the seal from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud.
Shakespeare.

Solyman shew'd him his own letters, asking him if he knew not that hand, and if he knew not that seal?
Knolles.

He saw his monkey picking the seal wax from a letter.
Arbutnot.

They their fill of love
Took largely, of their mutual guilt the seal.
Milton.

TO SEAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a seal.

He that brings this love to thee,
Little knows this love in me,
And by him seal up thy mind.
Shakespeare.

I have seen her rise from her bed, take forth paper, fold it, write upon it, and afterwards seal it.
Shakespeare.

2. To confirm or attest by a seal.

God join'd my heart to Romeo's, thou our hands;
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both.
Shallsp.

3. To confirm; to ratify; to settle.

My soul is purg'd from grudging hate,
And with my hand I seal our true hearts love.
Shakespeare.

When I have performed this, and seal'd to them
this fruit, I will come into Spain.
Romans.

4. To shut; to close; with up.

Seal up your lips, and give no words but mum!
Shakespeare.

At my death
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation.
Shakespeare.

The seal is like the sun; for the sun seals up the globe of heaven; and opens the globe of earth: so the seal doth obscure heavenly things, and reveals earthly things.
Bacon.

5. To make fast.

Back to the infernal pit I drag thee chain'd,
And seal thee for, as henceforth not to loam.
The fatal gates of hell too slightly barr'd.
Milton.

6. To mark with a stamp.

You'd rail upon the hostess,
And say you would present her at the feet,
Because she brought those jugs, and no seal'd quarts.
Shakespeare.

TO SEAL. v. n. To fix a seal,
I will seal unto this bond.
Shakespeare.

We make a sure covenant and write it, and our princes and priests seal unto it. Nchemiah.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
The seams with sparkling emeralds set around. Dryden.

Precepts should be so finely wrought together in the same piece, that no contrivance may discover where they join. Addison.

2. The juncture of planks in a ship.

With boiling pitch the seams inslope,
Which, well laid o'er, the salt sea waves withstand. Dryden.

3. A cicatrix; a scar.

4. [ream, Saxon, a load.] A measure; a vessel in which things are held; eight bushels of corn. Ainslie.

5. SEAM of Glass. A quantity of glass weighing 120 pounds.

6. [seme, Saxon; sein, Welsh; sein, Fr.]

Tallow; grease; hog's lard.

Shall the proud lord,
That bastes his arrogance with his own seam,
Be worshipp'd? Shakspeare.

Part scour the rusty shields with seam, and part
New grind the blunted ax. Dryden.

TO SEAM, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join together by future, or otherwise.

2. To mark; to scar with a long cicatrix.

Seam'd o'er with wounds, which his own seam gave. Pope.

Say, has the small or greater pox
Sunk down her nose, or seam'd her face? Swift.

SEAMLESS, adj. [from seam.] Having no seam.

SEAMMENT, n. f. [seam and rent.] A separation of any thing where it is joined; a breach of the stitches.

which enters into the cavity. Wijeman.

4. TO SEARCH out. To find by seeking.

Who went before you, to search you out a place to pitch your tents in? Deuteronomy.

They may sometimes be successful to search out truth. Watts.

TO SEARCH, v. n.

1. To make a search; to look for something.

Satisfy me once more; once more search with me. Shakspeare.

2. To make inquiry.

To ask or search I blame thee not. Milton.

Those who seriously search after or maintain truth, should study to deliver themselves without obscenity or equivocation. Locke.

It suffices that they have once with care sifted the matter, and searched into all the particulars that could give any light to the question. Locke.

With piercing eye some search where nature plays. Tickell.

And trace the wanton through her darksome maze. Tickell.

3. To seek; to try to find.

Your husband's coming, woman, to search for a gentleman that is here now in the house. Shakspeare.

We in vain search for that constitution within a sy, upon which depend those powers we observe in them. Locke.

SEARCH, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Inquiry by looking into every suspected place.

The orb he roam'd
With narrow search, and with inspection deep. Milton.

2. Examination.

The mind sets itself on work in search of some hidden idea, and turns the eye of the soul upon it. Locke.

3. Inquiry; act of seeking: with of, for, or after.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff: you shall seek all day ere you find them, and when you have them they are not worth the search. Shakspeare.

Who went in search of God and nature grow,
They beat the wife Creator's preface declare. Dryden.

Now mount thy fatal search:
It is not safe to have too quick a sense. Dryden.

By the philosophical use of words, I mean such as use as for very, the precise notions of things which the mind may be satisfied with in its search after knowledge. Locke.

The parents, after a long search for the boy, gave him for drowned in a canal. Addison.

This common practice carries the heart aside from all that is honest in our search after truth. Watts.

4. Quest; pursuit.

It zealous love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in himself? Shakspeare.

Stay him from his intendment, or brook such disgrace will as he shall run into; in that it is a trial of his own search, and altogether against my will. Shakspeare.

Nor did my search of liberty begin Till my black hairs were chang'd upon my clay. Dryden.

SE'ARCHER, n. f. [from search.]

1. Examiner; trier.

The Agnecies that seek wisdom upon earth, the authors of fables, and searchers out of understanding. For.

The searchers found a marvellous difference between the Anaxians and themselves. Reland.

Religion has given us a more just idea of divine nature: he whom we appeal to is truth itself,
the great searcher of hearts, who will not let fraud go unpunished, or hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain. Addison.

2. Seeker; inquirer.

In vain we lift up our presumptuous eyes
To what our Maker to their ken denies. Pope.

The searcher follows fast, the object flies. Pope.

Avoid the man who practices any thing without coming a free and open searcher after truth. Watts.

3. Officer in London appointed to examine the bodies of the dead, and report the cause of death.

The searchers, who are ancient matrons sworn to their office, repair to the place where the dead are laid, and by view of the same, and by other inquiries, examine by what disease the corps died. Grout.

SE'ARCLOTH, n. f. [searclath, Sax. from sear, pain, and clath, a plaster, so that searclath, as it is now written, from sear, wax, seems to be wrong.] A plaster; a large plaster.

Bees wax is the ground of all searclath salves. Mortimer.

SE'ASON, n. f. [saison, French.]

1. One of the four parts of the year, spring, summer, autumn, winter.

The fairest flowers o' th' saison
Are our carnations and streak'd gillyflowers. Shakspeare.

Then summer, autumn, winter did appear,
And spring was but a saison of the year. Dryden.

We saw, in six days travelling, the several seasons of the year in their beauty. Addison.

2. A time, as distinguished from others.

He's noble, wise, judicious, and best known.
The fits o' th' saison. Shakspeare.

The saison, prime for sweetest seeds and snow. Milton.

3. A fit time; an opportune concurrence.

At saison fit let her with thee partake. Milton.

All business should be done betimes; and there's as little trouble of doing it in saison too, as out of saison. L'Estrange.

For active sports, for pleasing rest,
This is the time to be possess'd; Dryden.

The best is but in saison best.

I would indulge the gladness of my heart
Let us retire: her grief is out of saison. Philips.

There is no saison to which such thoughts as these are more suitable.

The saison when to come, and when to go,
To sing, or cease to sing, we never know. Pope.

4. A time not very long.

We'll slip you for a saison, but our jealousy
Does yet depend. Shakspeare.

5. [from the verb.] That which gives a high relish.

You lack the saison of all natures, sleep. Shakspeare.

SEASON. v. a. [seasoner, French.]
To mix with food any thing that gives a high relish.

Every oblation of thy meat offering shalt thou season with salt.

They seasoned every sacrifice, whereof a greater part was eaten by the priests.

For breakfast and supper, milk and milk-pottage are very fit for children; only let them not be seasoned with sugar.

The wife contriver,
To keep the waters from corruption free,
Mint them with salt, and season'd all the sea.

2. To give a relish to; to recommend by something mingled.

You season still with sports your serious hours;
For age but tastes of pleasures, youth devours.

The proper use of wit is to season conversation, to represent what is praiseworthy to the greatest advantage, and to expose the vices and follies of men.

3. To qualify by admixture of another ingredient.

Mercy is above this scepter'd sway;
It is an attribute to god himself;
And earthly pow'r does then flow likest God's,

When mercy season justice.

Season your admiration but a while
With an attentive ear, till I deliver
This marvel to you.

4. To imbue; to tinge or taint.

Whatever thing
The fettle of time mows down, devour unspar'd,
Till I, in man, residing, through the race
His thoughts, his looks, words, actions, all infect,
And season him this last and sweetest prey.

Secure their religion, season their younger years
With prudent and pious principles.

5. To fit for any use by time or habit; to mature.

The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended; and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren;
How many things by season'd time are
To their right praise and true perfection!

Who in want a hollow friend doth try
Directly seasons him his enemy.

We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From home all season'd office, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical.

The archers of his guard shot two arrows, every man together, against an inch board of well season'd timber.

His plenteous stores do season'd timber send,
Thither the hawny carpenters repair.

A man should harden and season himself beyond the degree of cold wherein he lives.

TO SEASON. v. n. To become mature; to grow fit for any purpose.

Carpenters rough plane boards for flooring, that they may set them by to season.

SEASONABLE. adj. [season, Fr.] Opportune; happening or done at a proper time; proper as to time.

Mercy is seasonable in the time of affliction, as clouds of rain in the time of drought.

If ever it was seasonable to preach courage in the deserted abused cause of Christ, it is now, when his truths are reformed into nothing, when the hands and hearts of his faithful ministers are weakened.

SEASONABLENESS. n. f. [from seasonable.]

Opportuneness of time; propriety with regard to time.

A British freeholder would very ill discharge his part, if he did not acknowledge the excellency and probability of those laws by which his country has been recovered out of its confusions.

SEASONABLY. adv. [from seasonable.]
Properly, with respect to time.

This is that to which I would most earnestly, most seasonably, advise you all.

SEASONER. n. f. [from To season.] He who seasons or gives a relish to any thing.

SEASONING. n. f. [from season.] That which is added to any thing to give it a relish.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings and seasonings: so that some do extremely move appetites, and some do nourish as divers do live of them alone.

Some abound with words, without any seasoning or taste of matter.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing.

Political speculations are of so dry and austere a nature, that they will not go down with the public without frequent seasonings.

The publick accept a paper which has in it more of those seasonings that recommend the writings which are in vogue among us.

Many vegetable substances are used by mankind as seasonings, which abound with a highly exalted aromatic oil; as thyme and fennel.

SEAT. n. f. [sedes, Lat. sitt, old German,
Skinner.]

1. A chair, bench, or any thing on which one may sit.

Hasted, resorting to the fumous high,
And took their seats.

The lady of the least ordain'd a seat,
And made the lady of the flow'r her guest;

When, lo, a bow'r ascended on the plain,
With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train.

2. Chair of state; throne; post of authority; tribunal.

With due observance of thy goodly seat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall supply
Thy latest words.

Thus we debase
The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our chairs seats.

Whatever be the manner of the world's end, most certain it is an end it shall have, and as certain that then we shall appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every man may receive according to that which he hath done in his body, whether it be good or evil.

3. Mansion; residence; dwelling; abode.

It were enough in reason to succour with victuals, and other helps, a vast multitude, compelled by necessity to seek a new seat, or to direct them unto a country able to receive them.

O earth, how like to heav'n? if not preferred
Most justly, seat worthier of god, as built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old.

In Alba shall fix his royal seat;
And, born a king, a race of kings beget.

His winter caus'd thee, friend, to change thy seat.

And seek in Sabine air a warm retreat?

The promisd seat of empire shall again
Cover the mountain, and command the plain.

4. Situation; site.

It followeth now that we had out the seat of Eden; for in it was Paradise by God planted.

A church by Strand-bridge, and two bishops houses, were pulled down to make a seat for his new building.

He that builds a fair house upon an ill seat, com-mitteth himself to prison.

The fittest and the easiest to be drawn
To our society, and to aid the war.

The rather for their seat, being next borders
On Italy.

TO SEAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place on seats; to cause to sit down.

The guests were no sooner seated but they entered into a warm debate.

2. To place in a post of authority, or place of distinction.

Thus high was King Richard seated, Shakspeare,
Not Babylon,

Nor great Alcaid such magnificence
Equal'd in all their glories, to insurmount
Belus or Senapus their gods, or seat
Their kings.

A spirit of envy or opposition makes mankind uneasy to see others of the same species seated above them in a sort of perfection.

3. To fix in any particular place or situation; to settle.

Should one family or one thousand hold possession of all the southern undisturbed continent, because they had seated themselves in Nova Guinea?

By no means build too near a great neighbour, which were, in truth, to be as unfortunately seated on the earth as Mercury is in the heavens: for the most part ever in combustion, or obscurity, under brighter beams than his own.

4. To fix; to place firm.

Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth upstart my heart,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the idle of nature?

From their foundations loosening to and fro,
They pluck'd the planted hills.

SEAWARD. adv. [sea and peard, Saxon.] Toward the sea.

The rock wall'd forward with impetuous roar,
Ingulf'd, and to the abyss the boulder bore.

SECANT. n. f. [secans, Lat. secant, Fr.]
In geometry, the right line drawn from the centre of a circle, cutting and meeting with another line, called the tangent, without it.

TO SECEDE. v. n. [secedo, Latin.] To withdraw from fellowship in any affair.

SECEDE. n. f. [from secede.] One who discovers his disapprobation of any proceedings by withdrawing himself.

TO SECEDE. v. a. [secedo, Lat.] To separate finer from grosser matter; to make the separation of substances in the body.

Birds are better meat than beasts, because their flesh doth assimilate more easily, and is more subtilly.

The palate or mucus secreted in the nose and windpipe, is not an excrementitious but a laudable humour, necessary for defending those parts, from which it is secreted, from excrementions.

SECESSION. n. f. [secessio, Latin.]
1. The act of departing.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from, the earth's surface, perturb not the equilib-ration of either hemisphere.

2. The act of withdrawing from council's or actions.

SECLE. n. f. [seculo, Fr. seculum, Latin.]
A century. Not in use.

Of a man's age, part he lives in his father's lifetime, and part after his son's birth; and therefore it is wont to be said that three generations make one secul, or hundred years, in the genealogies.

TO SECLUDE. v. d. [secludo, Lat.] To confine from; to shut up apart; to exclude.

None is secluded from that function, of any degree, state, or calling.

Some parts of knowledge God has thought fit to seclude from us; to fence them not only as believed the interdicted tree, by combination, but with operations and impossibilities.

The number of birds described may be more than hundred, and of fishes including shell-fish, as many but, if the shell fish be taken as, more than two hundred.

Let us see you tender plants in your conservatory
excluding all entrance of cold.

Let us see you tender plants in your conservatory
excluding them from the light of heaven.

SECOND. adj. [secund, Fr. secundus, Lat.]
It is observable, that the English have no

S E C

ordinal of two; as the Latins, and the nations deriving from them, have none of duo. What the Latins call secundus, from sequor, the Saxons term oðer, or anþer.]

1. The next in order to the first; the ordinal of two.
Sunk were their hearts with horror of the crime,
Nor needed to be warn'd a second time,
But bore each other back. Dryden.
2. Next in value or dignity; inferior.
I shall not speak superlatively of them, lest I be suspected of partiality; but thus I may truly say, they are second to none in the christian world. Bacon.

None I know
Second to me, or like, equal much less. Milton.
My eyes are full the same; each glance, each grace,
Keep their first lustre, and maintain their place,
Not second yet to any other face. Dryden.
Not these huge bulks, by which the giants slain
Lay overthrown on the Phlegrean plain:
'Twas of a lesser mould and lighter weight;
They call it thunder of a second rate. Addison.
By a sad train of miseries alone
Distinguish'd long, and second now to none. Pope.
Persons of second rate merit in their own country, like birds of passage, thrive here, and fly off when their employments are at an end. Swift.

SECOND-HAND. n. f. Possession received from the first possessor.
SECOND-HAND is sometimes used adjecti-vely. Not original; not primary.
Some men build too much upon authorities, they have but a second-hand or implicit knowledge. Locke.

They are too proud to cringe to second-hand favourites in a great family. Swift to Gay.
At SECOND-HAND. adv. In imitation; in the second place of order; by transmission; not primarily; not originally.
They put them with satires and epigrams, which second-hand had been taken up at first only to make their point, and at second-hand to flatter those who had second-hand their line. Pemle.
In imitation of second-hand, I shall transcribe from second-hand, a piece of railway. Patler.
'Spurious virtue is a maid;
A virtue but at second-hand. Swift.

SECOND. n. f. [Secund, Fr. from the adjective.]
1. One who accompanies another in a duel, to direct or defend him.
Their seconds minister an oath,
Which was indifferent to them both,
That on their knightly faith and truth
No magic then supplied,
And fought them that they had no charms,
Wherewith to work each other's harms,
But came with simple open arms
To have their causes tried. Drayton.

Their first encounters were very furious, till after some toil and bloodshed they were parted by the seconds. Addison.
Personal brawls come in as seconds to finish the dispute of opinion. Watts.
2. One who supports or maintains; a supporter; a maintainer.
He propounded the duke as a man of divers infirmities in the state, being sure enough of seconds after the first onset. Wotton.
Courage, when it is only a second to injustice, and falls on without provocation, is a disad-vantage to a character. Collier.

3. A Second Minute, the second division of an hour by sixty; the sixtieth part of a minute.
Four flames of an equal magnitude will be kept alive the space of sixteen second minutes, though one of these flames alone, in the same vessel, will not last above twenty-five or at most thirty seconds.
Withins.
Sounds move above 1140 English feet in a second minute of time, and in seven or eight minutes of time about 100 English miles. Locke.

S E C

To SECOND. v. a. [Secunder, Fr. secundo,
Lat. from the noun.]

1. To support; to forward; to assist; to come in after the act as a maintainer.

The authors of the former opinion were presently seconded by other wittier and better learned, who being loth that the form of church polity,
which they sought to bring in, should be otherwise than in the highest degree accounted of, took first an exception against the difference between church polity and matters of necessity to salvation. Hooker.

Though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them. Shaksp.
I to be the power of Israel's God
Avow, and challenge Dagon to the test,
Offering to combat thee, his champion bold,
With th' utmost of his godhead seconded. Milton.

Familiar Ovid tender thoughts inspires,
And nature second all his soft desires. Rowe.
If in company you offer something for a jest, and nobody second you in your laughter, you may condemn their taste; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift.

In human work, though labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;
In God's, one single can its ends produce,
Yet serves to second too some other use. Pope.

2. To follow in the next place.

You come permit
To second ill with ill. Shakspere.
Having formerly discomfited of a marital voyage, I think it not impertinent to second the same with some necessary relations concerning the royal navy. Keleigh.

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unweeting, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton.
Sin is seconded with sin; and a man seldom commits one sin to please, but he commits another to defend himself. South.

SECOND Sight. n. f. The power of seeing things future, or things distant: supposed inherent in some of the Scottish islanders.

As he was going out to steal a sheep, he was seized with a fit of second sight: the face of the country presented him with a wide prospect of new scenes, which he had never seen before. Addison.

SECOND fought. adj. [from second fight.]

Having the second fight.
Sawney was descended of an ancient family, renowned for their skill in prognosticks: most of his ancestors were second fought, and his mother but narrowly escaped for a witch. Addison.

SECONDARILY. adv. [from secondary.]
In the second degree; in the second order; not primarily; nor originally;
not in the first intention.

These atoms make the wind primarily tend downwards, though other accidental causes impel
it secondarily to a flopping motion. Digby.

He confesses that temples are erected, and finally kept, to the honour of saints, at least secon- darily. Stillingfleet.

It is primarily generated out of the effusion of melancholick blood, or secondarily out of the dregs and remainder of a phlegmonous or cadematick tumour. Harvey.

SECONDARINESS. n. f. [from secondary.]
The state of being secondary.

That which is peculiar and discriminative must be taken from the primary and secondariness of the perception. Norris.

SECONDARY. adj. [Secundarius, Lat.]

1. Not primary; not of the first intention.

Two are the radical differences: the secondary differences are as four. Bacon.

2. Succeeding to the first; subordinate.

Wheresoever there is moral right on the one hand, no secondary right can discharge it. L'Estrange.

Gravitation is the powerful cement which holds together this magnificent structure of the world, which stretcheth the north over the empty space, and hangeth the earth upon nothing, to transfer the words of Job from the first and real earth to the secondary. Keleigh.

S E C

3. Not of the first order or rate.
If the system had been fortuitously formed by the convening matter of a chaos, how is it conceivable that all the planets, both primary and se- condary, should revolve the same way, from the west to the east, and that in the same plane? Realty.

4. Acting by transmission or deputation.
That we were form'd then, say'st thou, and the work

Of secondary hands, by talk transfer'd
From father to his son? Milton.

As in a watch's fine machine,
Though many artful springs are seen,
The added movements which declare
How full the moon, how old the year,
Derive their secondary power
From that which simply points the hour. Prin.

5. A secondary fever is that which arises after a crisis, or the discharge of some morbid matter, as after the declension of the smallpox or measles. Quincy.

SECONDARY. n. f. [from the adjective.]
A delegate; a deputy.

SECONDLY. adv. [from second.] In the second place.

First, she hath disobeyed the law; and secondly,
transgressed against her husband. Eccelesi.

First, metals are more durable than plants, and
secondly, they are more solid and hard. Bacon.
The house of commons in Ireland, and secondly, the privy council, addressed his majesty against these half-pence. Swift.

SECOND-RATE. n. f. [second and rate.]
1. The second order in dignity or value.

They call it thunder of the second-rate. Addison.

2. [It is sometimes used adjectively.] Of the second order: a colloquial licene.

He was not then a second-rate champion, as they would have him, who think fortitude the best virtue in a hero. Dryden.

SECRECY. n. f. [from secret.]

1. Privacy; state of being hidden; concealment.

That's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and silent secrecy. Shakspere.

The lady Anne,
Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open as his queen. Shaksp.

In Nature's book of infinite secrecy
A little can I read. Shakspere.

2. Solitude; retirement; not exposure to view.

Thou in thy secrecy, although alone,
Felt with thyself accompanied, seek'st not Social communication. Milton.

There is no such thing as perfect secrecy, to encourage a rational mind to the perpetration of any base action; for a man must first extinguish and out the great light within him, his conscience must get away from himself, and shake off a thousand witnesses which he always carries about him, before he can be alone. South.

3. Forbearance of discovery.

It is not with publick as with private prayer: a this rather secrecy is commended than concealment; whereas that, being the publick act of a society, requireth accordingly more care to be of external appearance. Harvey.

4. Fidelity to a secret; taciturnity; im-late; close silence.

For secrecy no lady closer. Shakspere.
Secrecy and fidelity were their only qualities. Bacon.

SECRET. adj. [secret, Fr. secretus, Lat.]

1. Kept hidden; not revealed; concealed.

The secret things belong unto the Lord, and God; but those things which are revealed be of unto us. Isaiah.

Do this, or aught
Than this more secret, now design'd, I baste
To know. Milton.

2. Retired; private; unseen.

Then open'th withiſt's way,
And giv'ſt acceſs, though ſecret the retire?
And I perhaps am ſecret. Milton.
There ſecret in her ſapphire cell
He with the Naiſ wont to dwell. Fenton.
Faithful to a ſecret entruſted.
Secret Romans, that have ſpoke the word,
And will not palter. Shakſpeare.
Private; affording privacy.
The ſecret top
Of Oreb or of Sinai. Milton.
Occult; not apparent.
Or ſympathy, or ſome conſuatural force
Pow'ful at greateſt diſtance to unite
With ſecret unity things of like kind,
By ſecret conveyance. Milton.
My heart, which by a ſecret harmony
Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion ſweet. Milton.
Privy; obſcene.
CRET. n. f. [ſecret, Fr. secretum, Lat.]
Something ſtudiouſly hidden.
Infected minds
their deaf pillows will diſcharge their ſecrets. Shakſpeare.
There is no ſecret that they can hide from thee. Eachus.
We not to explore the ſecrets aſk of eternal empire. Milton.
A thing unknown; ſomething not yet diſcovered.
All bleſt ſecrets,
If you unpublish'd virtues of the earth. Shakſp.
All ſecrets of the deep, all Nature's works. Milton.
The Romans ſeem not to have known the ſecret of paper credit. Arbutnot.
Privacy; ſecrecy; inviſible or undiſcovered ſtate.
Bread eaten in ſecret is pleaſant. Proverbs.
In ſecret through the air ſhe comes. Milton.
SECRET. v. a. [from the noun.] To keep private.
Great care is to be uſed of the clerks of the council, for the ſecreting of their conſultations. Bacon.
SECRETARISHIP. n. f. [ſecrtaire, Fr.]
from ſecretary.] The office of a ſecretary.
SECRETARY. n. f. [ſecrtaire, Fr. ſecretarius, low Latin.] One intruſted with the management of buſineſs; one who writes for another.
Call Gardner to me, my new ſecretary. Shakſp.
That which is moſt of all profitable is, acquaintance with the ſecretaries, and employed men, of ambaſſadors. Bacon.
Cottington was ſecretary to the prince. Clarend.
To SECRET. v. a. [ſecreſus, Lat.]
1. To put aſide; to hide.
2. [In the animal economy.] To ſecern;
to ſeparate.
SECRETION. n. f. [from ſecreſus, Lat.]
1. That agency in the animal economy that conſiſts in ſeparating the various fluids of the body.
2. The fluid ſecreted.
SECRETIOUS. adj. [from ſecreſus, Lat.]
Parted by animal ſecretion.
They have a ſimilitude or contrariety to the ſecretious humours in taſte and quality. Floyer.
SECRETIST. n. f. [from ſecreſus.] A dealer in ſecrets.
Some things I have not yet thought fit to plainly to reveal; not out of any envious deſign of having them buried with me, but that I may baſter with their ſecreſiſts, that will not part with one ſecret
but in exchange for another. Boyle.
SECRETLY. adv. [from ſecreſus.]
1. Privately; privily; not openly; not publickly; with intention not to be known.

2. Latently; ſo as not to be obvious; not apparently.
Thoſe thoughts are not wholly mine; but either they are ſecretly in the poet, or may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.
SECRETESS. n. f. [from ſecreſus.]
1. State of being hidden.
2. Quality of keeping a ſecret.
I could muſter up
My giants and my witches too,
Which are vaſt conſtancy and ſecreſneſs. Donne.
SECRETERY. adj. [from ſecreſus, Latin.] Performing the office of ſecretion, or animal ſeparation.
All the glands are a congeries of veſſels complicated together, whereby they give the blood time to ſeparate through the capillary veſſels into the ſecretory, which afterwards excrete themſelves into one duct. Huy.
SECT. n. f. [ſecte, Fr. ſecta, Lat. from ſectando.]
1. A body of men following ſome particular matter, or united in ſome ſettled tenets. Often in a bad ſenſe.
We ſwear out,
In a wall'd priſon, packs and ſects of great ones,
That ebb and flow by th' moon. Shakſpeare.
The greateſt vicitude of things in the vicitude of ſects and religions: the true religion is built upon a rock; the reſt are toſſed upon the waves of time. Bacon.
The jealous ſects, that dare not truſt their cauſe
So far from their own will as to the laws,
You for their empire and their ſynod take. Droit.
The academics were willing to admit the goods of fortune into their notion of felicity; but no ſects of old philoſophers did ever leave a room for grievance. Dryden.
A ſect of freethinkers is a ſum of cyphers. Bentley.
2. In Shakſpeare it ſeems to be miſprinted for ſet.
Of our unbitted luſts, I take this that you call love to be a ſect or cion. Othello.
SECTARISM. n. f. [from ſect.] Diſpoſition to petty ſects, in oppoſition to things eſtabliſhed.
Nothing hath more marks of ſchiſm and ſecta-riſm than this preſbyterian way. King Charles.
SECTARY. n. f. [ſectaire, French; from
ſect.]
1. One who divides from publick eſtabliſh-ment, and joins with thoſe diſtinguiſhed by ſome particular whims.
My lord, you are a ſectary, Shakſpeare.
That's the plain truth.
Roman catholic tenets are inconſiſtent, on the one hand, with the truth of religion profeſſed and professed by the church of England, whence we are called proteſtants, and the anabaptiſts, and ſeparatiſts, and ſectaries, on the other hand, whole tenets are full of ſchiſm, and inconſiſtent with monarchy. Bacon.
The number of ſectaries does not concern the clergy in point of intereſt or conſcience. Suſt.
2. A follower; a pupil.
The ſectaries of my ceſſal ſkill,
That wont to be the world's chief ornament,
They under keep. Spenser.
SECTATOR. n. f. [ſectateur, French; ſectator, Latin.] A follower; an imitator;
a diſciple.
Hereof the wiſer fort and the beſt learned phi-

SECTION. n. f. [ſection, French; ſectio,
Latin.]
1. The act of cutting or dividing.
In the ſection of bodies, man, of all ſenſible creatures, has the ſulleſt brain to his proportion. Watſon.
2. A part divided from the reſt.
3. A ſmall and diſtinct part of a writing or book.
Inſtead of their law, which they might not read openly, they read, of the prophets, that which in likenels of matter came neareſt to each ſection of their law. Hooker.
The production of volatile ſalts I reſerve till I mention them in another ſection. Boyle.
Without breaking in upon the connection of his language, it is hardly poſſible to give a diſtinct view of his ſeveral arguments in diſtinct ſections. Locke.
SECTOR. n. f. [ſecteur, French.] In geometry.
Sector is an inſtrument made of wood or metal, with a point, and ſometimes a piece to turn out to make a true ſquare, with lines of ſines, tangents, ſecants, equal parts, rhombs, polygons, hours, latitudes, metals, and ſolids. It is generally uſeful in all the practical parts of the mathematicks, and particularly contrived for navigation, ſurveying, aſtronomy, dialling, and projection of the ſphere.
All the lines of the ſector can be accommodated to any radius, which is done by taking off all divisions parallelwiſe, and not lengthwiſe; the ground of which practice is this, that parallels to the baſe of any plain triangle bear the ſame proportion to it as the parts of the legs above the parallel do to the whole legs. Harris.
SECULAR. adj. [ſecularis, Latin; ſeculier, French.]
1. Not ſpiritual; relating to affairs of the preſent world; not holy; worldly.
This, in every ſeveral man's actions of common life, appropriateth unto himſelf publick and politick ſecular affairs. Hooker.
Then ſhall the ſecular power be ſeparated from the places, and the ſecular power be ſeparated from the
By ſpiritual power. Bacon.
2. [In the eccleſiaſtical ſenſe.]
monaſtic.
Thoſe northern ſects, whoſe religion gave great authority to the pope, thereby eate, to the clergy, but ſecular. Temple.
In France, vaſt numbers of eccleſiaſtics, ſecular and religious, live upon the labours of others. Addiſon.
3. [ſeculaire, French.] Happening coming once in a ſecle or century.
The ſecular year was kept but once in a century. Addiſon.
SECULARITY. n. f. [from ſecular.] Worldlineſs; attention to the things of the preſent life.
Lauſeneſs and ſecularity of ſpirit is the greateſt enemy to contemplation. Burnet.
To SECULARIZE. v. a. [ſeculariſer, Fr.
from ſecular.]
1. To convert from ſpiritual appropriations to common uſe.
2. To make worldly.
SECULARLY. adv. [from ſecular.] In a worldly manner.
SECULARNESS. n. f. [from ſecular.] Worldlineſs.
SECUNDINE. n. f. [ſecundines, ſecundas,
French; ſecunda, viz. partes, quod naſcentem infantem ſequuntur.] Afterbirth.
The membrane in which the embryo is wrapped; the afterbirth.
The caſting of the ſun is by the ancients compared to the breaking of the ſecundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for the ſecundine is but a general cover, not ſhaped according to the part, but the ſun is. Bacon.

Future ages be Wrapp'd in their curled serpentine asleep. Cowley.
If the fatus be taken out of the womb inclosed in the serpentine, it will continue to live, and the blood to circulate. Ray.

SECURE. adj. [securus, Latin.]

1. Free from fear; exempt from terror; safety; assured.

Confidence then bore thee on secur

To meet no danger. Milton.

2. Confident; not distrustful: with of.

But thou, secur of soul, imbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose.

Dryden.

One maid she had, below'd above the rest,
Seur of her, the secur she confest'd. Dryden

The portion of their wealth they design for the uses of the poor, they may throw into one of these publick repositories, secur that it will be well employed. Atterbury.

3. Sure; not doubting: with of.

Reply too secur of our discharge
From penalty. Milton.

It concerns the most secur of his strength, to pay to secur to expose him to an enemy. Rogers.

In Lethe's lake souls long oblivion taste;

Of future life secur, forgetful of the past. Dryden

We live and act as if we were perfectly secur of the final event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.

4. Careless; wanting caution; wanting vigilance.

Gideon smote the host, for the host were secur.

Judges.

5. Free from danger; safe.

Let us not then suspect our happy state,

As not secur to single or comb'd. Milton.

Medias next,

Secure of steel, and lated from the fire,

In secur appears. Dryden.

Secure of secur blows,

Atterbury.

2. Without danger; safely.

We upon our globe's last verge shall go,

And view the ocean leaning on the sky;

From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,

And on the lunar world *secur*ly pry. Dryden.

SECURENESS. n. f. [from secur.] The cause of safety; protection; defence.

They, like Judas, desire death; Cain, on the contrary, grew afraid thereof, and obtained a secur

ement from it. Brown.

SECURITY. n. f. [securité, Fr. securitas,

Latin; from secur.]

1. Carelessness; freedom from fear.

Marvellous *secur*ty is always dangerous, when men will not believe any bees to be in a hive, until they have a sharp sense of their stings. Haywood.

2. Vitious carelessness; confidence; want of vigilance.

How trustless then and dead a soul hath he,

Which thinks his soul doth with his body die;

Or thinks not so, but so would have it be,

That he might sin with more *secur*ty? Davies.

3. Protection; defence;

If the providence of God be taken away, what *secur*ty have we against the innumerable dangers to which human nature is continually exposed? Tillotson.

4. Any thing given as a pledge or caution;

insurance; assurance for any thing; the act of giving caution, or being bound.

There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secur; but *secur*ty enough to make fellowships account. Shakespeare.

When they had taken *secur*ty of Jason, they let them go. Acts.

It is possible for a man, who hath the appearance of religion, to be wicked and an hypocrite; but it is impossible for a man, who openly declares against religion, to give any reasonable *secur*ty that he will not be false and cruel. Swift.

Each other bills have been generally reckoned the surest and most sacred of all *secur*ties. Swift.

The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and *secur*ties upon mortgages. Arbuthnot.

5. Safety; certainty.

Some, who gave their advice for entering into a war, alleged that we should have no *secur*ty for our trade, while Spain was subject to a prince of the Bourbon family. Swift.

SEDAN. n. f. A kind of portable coach;

a chair. I believe because first made at Sedan.

Some beg for absent persons, feign them sick,

Close mew'd in their sedans for want of air,

And for their wives produce an empty chair. Dryd.

By a tax of Cato's it was provided, that women's wearing cloaths, ornament, and sedan, exceeding

12*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* halfpenny, should pay 30*s.* in the hundred pound value. Arbuthnot.

SEDATE. adj. [sedatus, Latin.] Calm; quiet; still; unruffled; undisturbed;

serene.

With countenance calm and soul sedate,

Thus I urnus. Dryden.

Disputation carries away the mind from that calm and sedate temper which is necessary to contemplate truth. Watts.

SEDATELY. adv. [from sedate.] Calmly;

without disturbance.

That has most weight with them that appears

sedately to come from their parents reason. Locke.

SEDATENESS. n. f. [from sedate.] Calmness; tranquillity; serenity; freedom from disturbance.

There is a particular sedateness in their conversation and behaviour that qualifies them for conduct, with a great impetuosity that fits them for action. Addison.

SEDENTARINESS. n. f. [from sedentary.]

The state of being sedentary; inactivity.

SEDENTARY. adj. [sedentare, Fr. se-

dentario, Italian; sedentarius, from sedo

Latin.]

1. Puffed in sitting still; wanting motion or action.

A sedentary life, appropriate to all students, crushes the bowels; and, for want of turning the body, suffers the spirits to be dormant. Harvey.

The blood of labouring people is more dense and heavy than of those who live a sedentary life. Arbuthnot.

2. Torpid; inactive; sluggish; motionless.

The sedentary earth,

That better might with far less compass move,

Serv'd by more noble than herself, attains

Her end without least motion. Milton.

Till length of years,

And sedentary numbness, crase my limbs

To a contemptible old age obscure. Milton.

The soul, considered abstractedly from its passions, is of a remiss sedentary nature, slow in its solves, and languishing in its executions. Newton.

SEDF. n. f. [seag, Saxon; whence, in the provinces, a narrow flag is called

flag or sedg.] A growth of narrow flags,

a narrow flag.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides,

Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage

But when his fair course is not hinder'd,

He makes sweet music with the channel's sides,

Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge

He overtakes in his pilgrimage;

And so by many winding nooks he strays,

With willing sport, to the wild ocean. Shakespeare.

Adonis, painted by a running brook,

And Cytherea all in sedges hid;

Which seem to move and wanton with her breast,

Even as the waving sedges play with wind. Shakespeare.

In hotter countries a fly called sedg, that flutters as the glow-worm, is chiefly upon sedg and marshes; yet is not seen but in the height of summer, and sedg or other green of the time give a good shade as bushes. Bacon.

He hid himself in the sedges adjoining. Sandys.

My bonds I break,

Fled from my guards, and in a muddy lake,

Amongst the sedges, all the night lay hid. Davies.

Niphates, with inverted urn,

And drooping sedg, shall his Armenia mourn. Dryden.

SEDFY. adj. [from sedg.] Overgrown with narrow flags.

On the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,

In single opposition, best to hand,

He did confound the best part of an hour,

In changing hardiment with great Glendower. Shakespeare.

Old father Thames rais'd up his reverend head,

But fear'd the fate of Hamois would return:

Deep in his ooze he sought his sedgy bed,

And shrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

SEDIMENT. n. f. [sediment, French; sed-

imentum, Latin.] That which subsides settles at the bottom.

The salt water rises into a kind of foam on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom, and so is rather a separation than an evaporation. Brown.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South.

That matter sunk not down till last of all, settling at the surface of the sediment, and covering all the rest. Woodward.

SEDITION. n. f. [sedition, French; sediti-

Latin.] A tumult; an insurrection; a popular commotion; an uproar.

That son mine brew'd a storm for him,

That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,

And heap'd sedition on his crown at home. Shakespeare.

In soothing them we nourish, 'midst our flames,
The cackle of rebellion, insurrection, sedition. Shaksp.
FACIOUS, adj. [sedition, French;
factiosus, Latin.] Factionous with tumult;
turbulent.

The cause, why I have brought this army hither,
To remove proud Somerset from the king,
And to his grace and to the state, Shaksp.
Very many of the nobility in Edenborough, at at time, did not appear yet in this seditionous behaviour. Clarendon.

Thou returnest
From flight, sedition angel. Milton.
But if he has deform'd this earthly life
With mind's rapine and sedition strife,
A everlasting darkness must be lie;
All more unhappy that the cannot die. Prior.

FACIOUSLY, adv. [from sedition.] Tu-multuously; with factionous turbulence.
FACIOUSNESS, n. f. [from sedition.]
Turbulence; disposition to sedition.
SEDUCE, v. a. [seduco, Lat. seduire, French.] To draw aside from the right;
to tempt; to corrupt; to deprave; to mislead; to deceive.

'Tis meet
That noble minds keep ever with their likes;
For who to firm that cannot be seduced? Shaksp.
No the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
he sooner to effect what I intended. Shaksp.
A beauty-warming and distressed widow seduced the pitch and height of all his thoughts to his declaration. Shaksp.

In the latter times some shall depart from the truth, giving heed to seducing spirits. 1 Timothy.
I shall never gratify the spitefulness of a few with any sinister thoughts of all their allegiance, when pious frauds have seduced. King Charles.
Subtle he needs must be who could seduce
Angels. Milton.

Not let false friends seduce thy mind to fame,
By arrogating Junius's hostile name;
Let father Flecknose fire thy mind with praise,
And uncle Ogleby thy envy raise. Dryden.
EDUCEMENT, n. f. [from seduce.] Practice of seduction; art or means used in order to seduce.

To fashion them, and win them early to the love of virtue and true labour, are any flattering seduce- ment or vain principle which they wandering, loosely and delightful book of education should be read to them. Milton.

Her hero's dangers touch'd the pitying pow'r,
The nymph's seducements, and the magic bow'r. Pope.

EDUCER, n. f. [from seduce.] One who draws aside from the right; a tempter;
a corrupter.

Grant it me, O king; otherwise a seducer floun-ders, and a poor maid is undone. Shaksp.
There is a teaching by restraining seducers, and removing the hindrances of knowledge. South.
The soft seducer, with enticing looks,

Be bellowing-gravels to the sight provokes. Dryden.
He, whose firm faith no reason could remove,
Will melt before that soft seducer, love. Dryden.

EDUCIBLE, adj. [from seduce.] Cor-ruptible; capable of being drawn aside from the right.

The vicious example of ages past seduces the curiosity of the present, affording a hint of his autoseducible spirits. Brown.

We owe much of our error to the power which our affections have over our too easily seducible understandings. Glauville.

SEDUCTION, n. f. [seduction, Fr. seduction, Lat.] The act of seducing; the act of drawing aside.

Whatsoever men's faith, patience, or perseverance were, any remarkable indulgence to this sin, the seduction of Balaam, was sure to bring judgments. Hammond.

To procure the miseries of others in those extor-tations, wherein we hold an hope to have no society ourselves; is a strain above Lucifer, and a project beyond the primary seduction of hell. Brown.

The deceiver soon found out this soft place of Adam's, and innocency itself did not secure him from this way of seduction. Glauville.

Helen ascribes her seduction to Venus, and mentions nothing of Paris. Pope.

A woman who is above flattery, and despises all praise but that which flows from the approbation of her own heart, is, morally speaking, out of reach of seduction. Clarissa.

SEDULITY, n. f. [sedulitas, Lat.] Diligent assiduity; laboriousness; industry;
application; intenseness of endeavour.

Man oftentimes pursues, with great sedulity and earnestness, that which cannot stand him in any stead for vital purpose. Hooder.

Let there be but the same propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same se- dulity and indefatigable industry in men's enquiries into it. South.

SEDULOUS, adj. [sedulus, Lat.] Assiduous; industrious; laborious; diligent;
painful.

Not sedulous by nature to indite
Wars, hitherto the only argument
Heroick deem'd. Milton.

What signifies the sound of words in prayer, without the affection of the heart, and a sedulous application of the proper means that may naturally lead us to such an end. 1. Exeget.

The goat, now bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthaea, reach'd her teat, distill'd
With milk, thy early food: the sedulous bee Distill'd her honey on thy purple lips. Prior.

The bare majesty of a few representatives is often procured by great industry and application, wherein those who engage in the pursuits of malice are much more sedulous than such as would prevent them. Swift.

SEDULOUSLY, adv. [from sedulous.] Assiduously; industriously; laboriously; diligently; painfully.

The ritual, preceptive, prophetic, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Gov. of the Tongue.

All things by experience
Are most improv'd; then sedulously think
To meliorate thy stock, no way or rule
Be unessay'd. Philips.

SEDULOUSNESS, n. f. [from sedulous.]
Assiduity; assiduousness; industry; diligence.

SEE, n. f. [sedes, Lat.] The seat of episcopal power; the diocese of a bishop.

You, my lord archbishop,

Whose see is by a civil peace inamortu'd,
Whose hand the silver band of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,

The dove and every blest d spirit of peace,
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war? Shaksp.

It is a safe opinion for their sees, empires, and kingdoms; and for themselves, if they be wise.

The pope would use these treasures, in case of any great calamity that should endanger the holy see. Bacon.

Episcopal revenues were so low reduced, that three or four sees were often united to make a tolerable competency. Swift.

To SEE, v. a. pret. I saw; part. pass. seen.
[reon, Sax. seen, Dutch.]

1. To perceive by the eye.

Dear son Edgar,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say I had eyes again. Shaksp.

I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismay'd at the seeing of it. Spink.

I speak that which I have seen with my father, and ye do that which you have seen with yours. John.

He'll lead the life of gods, and he
By gods and heroes seen, and gods and heroes see. Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good for you; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Lacer.

I see her sober over a sampler. Pope.

2. To observe; to find.

Seven other kine came up, lean starved, such as I never see for badness. Geoffis.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence should pass a spy. Milton.
Give them first one simple idea, and see that they perfectly comprehend it, before you go any farther. Laker.

The thunderbolt we see used, by the greatest poet of Augustus's age, to express irresistible force in battle. Addison.

3. To discover; to discern.

Who is to grope
As cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold but lays he sees it? Shaksp.
When such all dealings must be seen in thought? Shaksp.

4. To converse with.

The main of them may be reduced to language,
and to an improvement in wisdom and penitence,
by seeing men, and conversing with people of disferent tempers and customs. Laker.

5. To attend; to remark.

I had a mind to see him out, and therefore did not care for contradicting him. Addison.

To SEE, v. n.

1. To have the power of sight; to have by the eye perception of things distant.

Who maketh the seeing or the blind? have not I,
the Lord? Exodus.
Air hath some secret degree of light; otherwise cats and owls could not see in the night. Bacon.

2. To discern without the aid of eyes.

Many sagacious persons will see in every look under our noses, and see through all our pretensions, and discern the seeing of the world that we see in every thing. Shaksp.

Could you see the world as I see it, you would
There you might read your own seeing doubled. Dryden.

You may see into the spirit of them all, and turn your pen from those general notions. Johnson.

3. To inquire; to distinguish.

See whether four doth make thee wrong here. Shaksp.

4. To be attentive.

Mark and perform it, see'st thou? for the fall
Of any point in 't shall be death. Shaksp.

5. To scheme; to contrive.

Caesar's a proper man: let us see now
To get his place. Shaksp.

SEE, interjection. [originally the imperative of the verb see.] Lo; look; observe;
behold.

See! see! upon the banks of Boyne he stands,
By his own view adjusting his commands. H. B. Jun.
See! the sole bliss heaven could on all bestow,
Which who but feels can taste, but thinks can know. Pope.

See what it is to have a poet in your house. Pope.

SEED, n. f. [seeb, Saxon; seed, Danish;
seed, Dutch.]

1. The organized particle produced by plants and animals, from which new plants and animals are generated.

If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow and which will not,
Speak then to me. Shaksp.

Seed of a year old is the best, though seeds seed and grains last better than others. Bacon.
That every plant has its seed, is an evident sign of divine providence. Morr.

Did they ever see any herbs, except those of the grass-leaved tribe, come up without two seed leaves?

which to me is an argument that they came all of seed, there being no reason else why they should produce two feed leaves different from the subsequent.

Just gods! all other things their like produce;
The vine arises from her mother's juice;
When feeble plants or tender flow'rs decay,
They to their seed their images convey. Prior.
In the south part of Staffordshire they go to the north for seed corn. Mortimer.

2. First principle; original.

The seed of whatsoever perfect virtue groweth from us, is a right opinion touching things divine. Hooker.

3. Principle of production.

Praise of great acts he sentiers, as a seed
Which may the like in coming ages breed. Waller.

4. Progeny; offspring; descendants.

Next him king Lear in happy peace long reign'd;
But had no issue male him to succeed,
But three fair daughters which were well uptrain'd
In all that seemed fit for kingly seed. Fairy Queen.
The thing doth touch
The main of all your states, your blood, your seed. Daniel.

When God gave Canaan to Abraham, he thought fit to put his seed into the grant too. Locke.

5. Race; generation; birth.

Of mortal seed they were not held,
Which other mortals to excelld;
And beauty too in such excess,
As yours, Zelinda! claims no less. Waller.

TO SEED. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow to perfect maturity, so as to shed the seed.

What'er I plant, like corn on barren earth,
By an equivocal birth,
Seeds and runs up to poetry. Swift.

2. To shed the seed.

They pick up all the old roots, except what they design for seed, which they let stand to seed
the next year. Mortimer.

SEEDCAKE. n. f. [seed and cake.] A sweet cake interspersed with warm aromatick seeds.

Remember, wife,
The seedcake, the pasties, and surmety pot. Tupper.

SEEDLOP. } lower carries his seed.

SEEDPEARL. n. f. [seed and pearl.] Small grains of pearl.

In the dissolution of seedpearl in some acid menstruum, if a good quantity of the little pearls be cast in while, they will be carried in swarms from the bottom to the top. Boyle.

SEEDPLOT. n. f. [seed and plot.] The ground on which plants are sowed to be afterward transplanted.

To counsel others, a man must be furnished with an universal store in himself to the knowledge of all nature; that is, the matter and seedplot: there are the seats of all argument and invention. Ben Jonson.

Humility is a seedplot of virtue, especially christian, which thrives best when 'tis deep rooted in the humble lowly heart. Hammond.

It will not be unuseful to present a full narration of this rebellion, looking back to those passages by which the seedplots were made and framed, from whence those mischiefs have successfully grown. Clarendon.

SEEDTIME. n. f. [seed and time.] The season of sowing.

While the earth remains, seedtime and harvest shall not cease. Genesis.
It he would have two tributes in one year, he must give them two seedtimes, and two harvests. Bacon.

The first rain fell upon the seedtime about October, and was to make the seed to root; the latter was to fill the ear. Brown.

Day and night,
Seedtime and harvest, heat and hoary frost,
Shall hold their course, till fire purge all things. Milton.

Their very seedtime was their harvest, and by sowing tares they immediately reaped gold.

He that too curiously observes the face of the heavens, by mistaking his seedtime, will lose the hopes of his harvest. Atterbury.

SEEDLING. n. f. [from seed.] A young plant just risen from the seed.

Carry into the shade such seedlings or plants as are for their chumchests reserved in pots. Evelyn.

To teeming foison. Shakespeare.

SEEDSMAN. n. f. [seed and man.]

1. The sower; he that scatters the seed.

The higher Nilus swells
The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedsmen
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakespeare.

2. One that sows seed.

SEEDY. adj. [from seed.] Abounding with seed.

SEE'ING. n. f. [from see.] Sight; vision.

Love adds a precious seeing to the eye. Shaksp.

SEE'ING. } adv. [sé que, Fr. from

SEE'ING that. } sic. It would be more grammatically written, as vá que, pour á que, in French; seen that, or provided that. Since; sith; it being so that.

Why should not they be as well victualled for so long time, as the ships are usually for a year, seeing it is easier to keep victuals on land than water? Spenser.

How shall they have any trial of his doctrine, learning, and ability to preach, seeing that he may not publicly either teach or exhort, because he is not yet called to the ministry? Whitgift.

Seeing every nation affords not experience and tradition enough for all kind of learning, therefore we are taught the languages of those people who have been most industrious after wisdom. Milton.

Seeing they explained the phenomena of vision, imagination, and thought, by certain thin fleeces of atoms that flow from the surfaces of bodies, and by their subtilty penetrate any obstacle, and yet retain the exactness of the several bodies from which they proceed: in consequence of this hypothesis they maintained, that we could have no phantom of any thing, but what did really subsist either in nature or in its several parts. Bentley.

TO SEEK. v. a. pret. I sought; part. pass. sought. [secan, Sax. soeken, Dutch.]

1. To look for; to search for: often with out.

He did range the town to seek me out. Shakespeare.

I have a venturesome fairy, that shall seek
The squirrel's board, and fetch thee thence new nuts. Shakespeare.

He seeketh unto him a cunning workman, to prepare a graven image. Isaiah.

Seek thee a man which may go with thee. Job.

Sweet peace, where dost thou dwell?

I humbly crave;

Let me once know;

I sought thee in a secret cave,

And ask'd if peace were there. Herbert.

The king meant not to seek out nor to decline fighting with them, if they put themselves in his way. Clarendon.

So fatal 'twas to seek temptations out!
Most confidence has still most cause to doubt. Dryden.

We must seek out some other original of power for the government of politics than this of Adam, or else there will be none at all in the world. Locke.

2. To solicit; to endeavour to gain.

Others tempting him, sought of him a sign. Lucretius.

The young lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat from God.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us, unless we ourselves
Seek them with wandering thoughts. Milton.

Oft our alliance other lands desir'd,
And what we seek of you, of us requir'd. Dryden.

3. To go to find.

Let us seek death, or, he not found, supply
His office. Milton.

Dardanus, though born
On Latian plains, yet sought the Phrygian shore. Dryden.

Like fury seiz'd the rest; the progress known,
All seek the mountains, and forsake the town. Dryden.

Since great Ulysses sought the Phrygian plain,
Within their walls inglorious silence reigns. Pope.

Indulge one labour more,
And seek Atides on the Spartan shore. Pope.

4. To pursue by machinations.

I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life. Shakespeare.

David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life. 1 Samuel.

TO SEEK. v. n.

1. To make search; to make inquiry.

Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read,
I have been forced to relinquish that opinion, and have endeavoured to seek after some better reason. Sp. Lib.

2. To endeavour.

Why should he mean me ill, or seek to harm?

Ask not what pains, nor further seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below. Drama.

3. To make pursuit.

Violent men have sought after my soul. Psalms.
If thy brother's ox or sheep go astray, it shall be with thee until thy brother seek after it. Deuteronomy.

to order that which the young prince sought to do. Knolly.

TO SEEK. [an adverbial mode of speech.]

At a loss; without measures, knowledge, or experience.

Being brought and transferred from other forces abroad, though they be of good experience in those, yet in these they will be new to seek; and better they have gathered experience, they shall but it with great loss to his majesty. Spenser.

Unpractic'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.

But they misplace them all;
And are as much to seek in other things
As he that only can design a tree,
Would be to draw a shipwreck. Johnson.

SEE'KER. n. f. [from seek.]

1. One that seeks; an inquirer.

Though I confess that in philosophy I am a seeker, yet cannot believe that a sceptick in philosophy must be one in divinity. Gloucester.

A language of a very witty volatile people, seekers after novelty, and abounding with variety of notions. Locke.

2. The name of a sect which professed no determinate religion.

SEE'KSORROW. n. f. [seek and sorrow.]

One who contrives to give himself vexation.

A field they go, where many lookers be,
And thou seek'sorrow, Klam, them among:
Indeed thou findest it was thy friend to see,
Stephen, whose absence seem'd into thee gone. Locke.

TO SEEL. v. a. [seeller, to seal, Fr.] To close the eyes.

A term of falconry, to eyes of a wild or haggard hawk being for a time feeled or clofed.

Now he brought them to see a feeled dove, who under the was, the higher she flave. Silney.
Blue eyes no more on vanity shall feed,
as feeld up with death shall have their dently weed. Fury Queen.

Come, feeling night,
as up the tender eye of pitiful day. Shakespeare.
Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes of dangers of danger and envy; for no man will be such parts, unless he be like the feeled dove, at mounts and mounts, because he cannot see out him. Bacon.
Since, blinded with ambition, he did four as a feeld dove, his crimes shall be his punishment.
e be depriv'd of light. Denham.

SEEL. v. n. [ryllan, Sax.] To lean on one side.

When a ship seels or rows in foul weather, the breaking loose of ordnance is a thing very dangerous. Raleigh.

FEEL or SEELING. n. f. [from feel.] The agitation of a ship in foul weather. Airworth.

LELY. adj. [from feel, lucky time, Sax.] Lucky; happy.

My feely sheep like well below,
For they been hale enough and trow,
And liken their abode. Spenjer.

Silly; foolish; simple.
Peacock and turkie, that nibbles off top,
Are very ill neighbours to feely poor hop. Tuffer.

To SEEM. v. n. [sembler, Fr. unless it has a Teutonick original, as seemly certainly has.]

To appear; to make a show; to have semblance.

My lord, you've lost a friend, indeed;
and I dare swear you borrow not that face of seeming forrow, it is sure your own. Shakespeare.

Speak; we will not trust our eyes
Villiant our ears: thou art not what thou seem'st.
Shakespeare.

So spake th' Omnipotent; and with his words
all seem'd well pleas'd; all seem'd, but were not all.
Milton.

In holy nuptials tied;
A seeming widow, and a secret bride. Dryden.
Observe the youth
Vivacious seems to snuff the vital air. Dryden.

To have the appearance of truth.

It seems to me, that the true reason why we have few virtuous which are tolerable, is because there is so few who have all the talents requisite for cultivation. Dryden.

In Shakespeare, to seem, perhaps, signifies to be beautiful.

See, there she stands:
I caught within that little seeming substance
May fully like your grace, e's there, and she is yours. King Lear.

It SEEMS. A phrase hard to be explained. It sometimes signifies that there is an appearance, though no reality; but generally it is used ironically to condemn the thing mentioned, like the Latin semiter, or the old English furfooth.

Id. mihi datur negotii scilicet. This, it seems, is to be my task.

The earth by these, 'tis said,
his single crop of men and women bred;
who, grown adult (so chance, it seems, enjoin'd)
all male and female propagate. Blackmore.

It is sometimes a slight affirmation.

A prince of Italy, it seems, entertained his mistress in a great lake. Addison.

The raven, urg'd by such impertinence,
Grew passionate, it seems, and took offence. Addison.

He had been a chief magistrate; and had, it seems, executed that high office justly and honourably. Atterbury.

SEEMS. v. n. [from seem.] To appear; to make a show; to have semblance.

SEEMING. n. f. [from seem.] The appearance; the show; the semblance.

SEEMINGLY. adv. [from seeming.] In appearance; in show; in semblance.

SEEMINGLY. adv. [from seem.] In appearance; in show; in semblance.

It seems that when first I was discovered sleeping on the ground, the emperor had early notice. Gulliver.

6. It appears to be.

Here's another discontented paper,
Found in his pocket too, and this, it seems,
Rodorigo meant to have sent. Shakespeare.

It seems, the camel's hair is taken by painters for the skin with the hair on. Brown.

SEEMER. n. f. [from seem.] One that carries an appearance.

Angelo trace could flee
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than frow: hence shall we see,
It pow'r change purpose, what our seemers be. Shakespeare.

SEE'MING. n. f. [from seem.] 1. Appearance; show; semblance.

All good seeming,
By thy revolt, oh husband, shall be thought
Put on for villany. Shakespeare.

Give him heedful note;
And, after, we will both our judgments join
In censure of his seeming. Shakespeare.

2. Fair appearance.
For you there's rosemary and rue; these keep Seeming and favour all the winter long. Shakespeare.

3. Opinion.
Nothing more clear unto their seeming, than that, a new Jerusalem being often spoken of in scripture, they undoubtedly were themselves that new Jerusalem. Hooker.

His persuasive words impregn'd
With reason to her seeming. Milton.

SEEMINGLY. adv. [from seeming.] In appearance; in show; in semblance.

To this her mother's plot,
She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath
Made promise to the doctor. Shakespeare.

They to their viands fell, not seemingly
The angels, nor in vain. Milton.

I have touched upon them, though seemingly collateral to my scope; and yet I think they are more than seemingly so, since they pertinently illustrate my design. Glanville.

The city dance was so well bred, as seemingly to take all in good part. 1st Exchange.

The king and haughty empress, to our wonder,
If not aston'd, yet seemingly at peace. Dryden.

This father seemingly complied with, but afterwards refusing, the son was likewise dissatisfied. Addison.

They depend often on remote and seemingly disproportioned causes. Atterbury.

SEEMINGNESS. n. f. [from seeming.] Plausibility; fair appearance.

The seemingness of their reasons persuade us on the other side. Dryden.

SEEMLINESS. n. f. [from seemly.] Decency; handsomeness; comeliness; grace; beauty.

When substantialness combine with delightful-ness, seemliness with portness, and curiousness with stayedness, how can the language found other than full of sweetness? Camden.

SEEMLY. adj. [from seemly, Danish; from foome, Islandick, honour or decency.]

Decent; becoming; proper; fit.

Suspense of judgement and excess of charity were safer and seemly for christian men, than the hot pursuit of these controversies. Hooker.

I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons. Shakespeare.

Safest and seemly by her husband stays. Milton.

May we enjoy
Our humid products, and with seemly draughts
Easie mirth and hospitable love. Philips.

SEEMLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a decent manner; in a proper manner.

There, seemly rang'd in peaceful order, stood Ulysses' arms, now long dispos'd to blood. Pope.

SEEN. adj. [from see.] Skilled; versed.

Petruchio shall offer me, disguised in sober robes,

To old Baptista, as a schoolmaster
Well seen in modest. Shakespeare.

Noble Boyle, not left in nature seen,
Than his great brother read in states and men. Dryden.

SEER. n. f. [from see.] 1. One who sees.

We are in hopes that you may prove a dreamer of dreams, and a seer of visions. Spectator.

2. A prophet; one who foresees future events.

How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world the race of time.
Till time stand fix'd. Milton.

By day your sighted seers
Shall call for mountains to express their tears.
And with their eyes were floods: by night from the clouds
Of opening gulphs, black storms, and raging flames,
Starting amaz'd, shall in the people flow Emblems of heavenly wrath, and mynion types of Pier.

SEERWOOD. n. f. See SEARWOOD. Dry wood.

Caught, like dry bubble bird, or like seerwood;
Yet from the wound extrud'd no purple blood,
But look'd a bubbling mass of frying blood. Dryden.

SEE'SAW. n. f. [from saw.] A reciprocating motion.

His wit all see'saw, between that and this;
Now high, now low, now master up, now mistress.
And he himself one vile antithesis. Pope.

To SEE'SAW. v. n. [from saw.] To move with a reciprocating motion.

Sometimes they were like to pull John over, then it went all of a sudden again on John's side; so they went see'sawing up and down, from one end of the room to the other. Aylmer.

To SEETH. v. a. preterit I sod or seethed;
part. pass. sodden. [reuban, Sax. soden,
Dutch.] To boil; to decoct in hot liquor.

The Scythians used to seeth the flesh in the hide,
and to do the northern Irish. Spenser.

Go, suck the subtle blood of th' grape,
Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth,
And so 'scape hanging. Shakespeare.

Set on the great pot, and seeth postage for the sons of the prophets. 2 Kings.

To SEETH. v. n. To be in a state of ebullition; to be hot.

The boiling baths at Canbaban,
Which seeth with secret fire eternally,
And in their entrails, full of quick brimston,
Nourish the flames which they are warm'd upon. Fairy Queen.

I will make a complimentary assault upon him;
for my business seeths. Shakespeare.

Lovers and madmen have such seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakespeare.

The priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh hook, and stuck it into the pot. 1 Samuel.

SEETHER. n. f. [from seeth.] A boiler; a pot.

The sea thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like household gold the little seethers flow. Dryden.

SEGMENT. n. f. [segment, Fr. segmentum, Latin.] A figure contained between a chord and an arch of the circle, or so much of the circle as is cut off by that chord.

Unto a parallel sphere, and such as live under the poles, for half a year, the segments may appear at any time, and under any quarter, the sun not setting, but walking round. Brown.

Their segments of arcs, which appeared so numerous, for the most part exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton.

SEG'NITY. n. f. [from segnis, Lat.] Sluggishness; inactivity. Dick.

itive: joined to my, thy, our, your, &c.

pronoun adjectives, it seems a substantive. Even when compounded with him it is at last found to be a substantive, by its variation in the plural, contrary to the nature of English adjectives, as himself, themselves.

No more he mention'd then of violence Against ourselves, or wilful barrenness. Milton.
Myself, himself, themselves, and the rest,
may, contrary to the analogy of my, him,
them, be used as nominatives.

It often adds only emphasis and force to the pronoun with which it is compounded: as, he did it himself.

A horse well bitten, which himself did dress.
Dryden
And touch'd with miseries myself have known,
Learn to pity woes so like my own. Dryden.

It signifies the individual, as subject to his own contemplation or action.

The spark of noble courage now awake,
And drive your excellent self to excel. F. Queen.

Next to the knowledge of God, this knowledge of ourselves is our most worthy of our endeavors. Hale.

Since consciousness always accompanies thinking, and it is that that makes every one to be what he calls self, and thereby distinguishes himself from all other thinking things; in this alone consists personal identity, i. e. the sameness of a rational being. Locke.

It is by the consciousness it has of its present thoughts and actions, that it is self to itself now, and so will be the same self, as far as the same consciousness can extend to actions past or to come. Locke.

The fondness we have for self, and the relation which other things have to our self, furnishes another long rank of prejudices. Harris.

It is much used in composition, which it is proper to explain by a train of examples. It is to be observed, that its composition in Shakspere is often harsh.

Then held the her tongue, and cast down a self-accusing look, finding that self felt the had it out of the bow of her affection a more quick opening of her mind than the minded to have done. Sidney.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
Of our self-love, to passions do deceive
We think they hurt when most they do assist. Sidney.

But Strephon's planning voice him nearer drew,
Where by his words his self-like tale he knew. Sidney.

Ah! where was first that cruel cunning found,
To frame of earth a vessel of the mind,
Where it could be to self-destruction bound? Sidney.

Before the door sat self-continuing care,
Day and night keeping wary watch and ward. Fairy Queen.

My strange and self-abuse
Is the minute fear that wants hard use. Shaksp.

I have heard so much,
And such Diemetrus thou, but I have spoke thereof,
But being over-full of self affairs,
My mind did forget. Shakspere.

Not know I taught
By me that's said or done amiss this night,
That's self-charity he sometimes a vice,
And to defend ourselves it be a sin,
When violence affords us. Shakspere.

He walks, and that self chain about his neck,
Which he forbore. Shakspere.

It is in my power, in one self-born hour,
To plant and overwhelm confusion. Shakspere.

His treasons will fit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But self affrighted tremble at his sin. Shakspere.

The stars above us govern our conditions;
Is one self-mate and mate could not beget
Such different issues. Shakspere.

I'm made of that self-metal as my sister,
And prize me at her worth. Shakspere.

I my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To lead the other forth. Shakspere.

He may do some good on her:
A Jewish self-will'd harlotry it is. Shakspere.

But let myself be guilty of self-wrong,
I'll stop mine ears against the metemorphosis. Shakspere.

He conjunct, and flatter'd his displeasure,
Tript me behind: being down, insulted, rail'd,
Got praxes of the king

For him attempting who was self-subdu'd. Shaksp.
The Everlasting fix

His cannon 'gainst self slaughter. Shakspere
Know of his last purpose hold,
Or whether since he is advis'd by night

To change the course. He's full of alteration
And self reproving. Shakspere.

More nor less to others paying,
Than by self-offences weighing;
Shame to him whole cruel striking Kills for faults of his own liking. Shakspere.

Pellon's bridegroom, kept in proof,
Confronted him with self-captivity,
Point against point. Shakspere.

Self-love, my liege, is not to vile a sin
As self-neglecting. Shakspere.

Anger is like
A full hot horse, who, being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakspere.

His loads desire him to have borne
His bruised helmet and his bearded sword
Before him through the city; he forbids it,
Being free from vanities and self-glorious pride. Shakspere.

You promis'd
To lay aside self-burning heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition. Shakspere.

In their anger they drew a man, and in their self-will they digged down a well. Genesis.

The most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous minds, which are so sensible of every restraint as to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Bacon.

But though set up nothing in competition with God; no pride, profit, self-love, or self-interest of thy own? Dapper.

Up through the spacious palace pass'd the
To where the king's proudly reposed head,
It may be felt to tyranny.

And self-tormenting him, had a lost bed. Croshaw.
With a joyful willingness these self-loving reformers took possession of all vacant preferment, and with reluctance others parted with their beloved colleges and subsistence. Walton.

Repent the sin; but in the punishment
Thou canst avoid self-preservation bids.

Him fast sleeping soon he found,
In labyrinth of many a round self roll'd. Milton.

On times nothing profits more Than self-effacement, grounded on just and right,
Well manag'd. Milton.

Self-knowing, and from thence Magnanimous, to correspond with heav'n. Milton.

So virtue giv'n for lost,
Depress and overthrown, as fear'd,
Like that self begotten bird,

In th' Arabian woods embold,
That no second knows nor third,
And lay here while a holocaust,

From out her ugly womb now reem'd. Milton.
He sorrows now, repents, and prays contrite,

My motions in him longer than thy move,
His heart I know how variable and vain,
Self-left. Milton.

Seneca approves this self-homicide. Hale's will.
Thyself from flatter'd self conceit defend,
Nor what thou dost not know, to know pretend. Deukam.

Man's that savage bent, whose mind,
From reason to self-love doleful'd,
Delights to prey upon his kind. Denham.

Farewell, my tears;
And; my just anger, be no more confin'd
To vain complaints, or self-deavouring silence. Denham.

They are yet more mad to think that men may rest by death, though they die in self murder, the greatest sin. Craut.

Are not these strange self-deceptions, and yet attended by common experience? South.

If the image of God is only sovereignty, certainly we have been hitherto much mistaken, and hereafter are to beware of making ourselves unlike God, by too much self-denial and humility. South.

If a man would have a devout, humble, sublimed, self-denying frame of spirit, he cannot take a more efficacious course to obtain it than by praying himself into it. South.

Let a man apply himself to the difficult work of self-examination, by a strict scrutiny into the whole estate of his soul. South.

A fatal self imposture, such as defeats the desire, and destroys the force, of all religion. South.

When he intends to be a friend of all an illustrous person, he may rest him upon a bold self- opinioned phytocan, worse than this distemper, who shall make a flint to cure him into his grave. South.

Neglect of ourselves can never be proved rational, till we prove the person using it omnipotent and self sufficient, and such as can never need any mortal assistance. South.

By all human laws, as well as divine, self-murder has ever been agreed on as the greatest crime. Temple.

A self-conceited top will swallow any thing
it's strange. Temple.

From Athens though your ancient lineage came;
Yet my self contents worth your rich renown,
Your virtue, though the new, still hangs nations down. Dryden.

He has given you all the explanation which a his self judiciously could afford to any. Dryden.

Below you sphere
There hangs the ball of earth and water mixt,
Self-center'd and unmix'd. Dryden.

All these receive their birth from other things,
But from himself the phoenix only springs;
Self-born, begotten by the parent flame
In which he burn'd, another and the same. Dryden.

The burning one, that thence to bright,
Flaw'd all sudden with extinguish'd light,
And left one altar dark, a little space,
Which turn'd self kindled, and renew'd the blaze. Dryden.

Then said, O king! rebuke the rights of sway;
Power's self remand the people to obey. Dryden.

Ignaten and much on are equal to thirty-seven,
by the same self evidence that one and two are equal to three. Locke.

A contradiction of what has been said, is a mark of yet a deeper and self-conceitedness, when we take upon us to set another right in history. Locke.

I am as justly accountable for my action done many years since, appropriated to me now by this self-conformity, as I am for what I did the last minute. Locke.

Each interminate idea agreeing on each rule with those two, it is immediately placed between the ideas of moral and self-determination appear to be connected. Locke.

These self existent being hath the power of perfection, as well as of existence, in himself; for he that is above, in exactly without any cause, that is, hath the power of existence in himself, cannot be without the power of any possible existence. Crow.

Body cannot be self existent, in case it is not self existent; for motion is not of the essence of body, he can't we may have a de-lusive conception of body, abstracted from that of motion; wherefore motion is found that the bodies body, something without which body may be conceived to exist. Crow.

Confidery, as opposed to morality, and distinguished from direct assistance, proceeds from self- opinion, occasioned by ignorance or flattery. Collier.

Bewilder'd, I my author cannot find,
I'll long find cause, some self-existent mind,
Who form'd and rules all nature, is a god. John Moore.

If a fish body may to any place
Be not determin'd in the boundless space,
'Tis plain it then may about be from all,
Who then will this a self existence call? Blackmore.

Shall nature, crying from her first command,
Self-preservation, fall by her own hand? Blackmore.

How nonsense is the talent of a cold phlegmatick tongue: a writer of this complexion gropes him way foolishly amongst self-contradiction, and grovels in absurdity. Addison.

This fatal hypocrisy and self-deceit is taken notice of in these words, Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Spekt.

The guilt of perjury is to self-evident, that it was always reckoned amongst the greatest crimes, by those who were only governed by the light of reason.

Self-sufficiency proceeds from inexperience.

Men had better own their ignorance, than advance doctrines which are self-contradictory.

Light, which of all bodies is nearest allied to spirit, is also most diffusive and self-communicative.

Thus we see, in bodies, the more of kin they are to spirit in subtilty and refinement, the more spreading are they and self-diffusive.

God, who is an absolute spiritual act, and who is such a pure light as in which there is no darkness, must needs be infinitely self-unparting and communicative.

Every animal is conscious of some individual, self-moving, self-determining principle.

Nick does not pretend to be a gentleman: he is a tradesman, a self-seeking wretch.

By the blit of self-opinion mov'd,
We will to charm, and seek to be belov'd.

Living and understanding substantives do clearly demonstrate to philosophical inquirers the necessary self-existence, power, wisdom, and beneficence of their Maker.

If it can intrinsically stir itself, and either commence or alter its course, it must have a principle of self-activity, which is life and sense.

This desire of existence is a natural affection of the soul; 'tis self-preservation in the highest and truest meaning.

The philosophers, and even the epicureans, maintained the self-insufficiency of the godhead, and seldom or never sacrificed at all.

Matter is not endued with self-motion, nor with a power to alter the course in which it is put. It is merely passive, and must ever continue in that state it is settled in.

I took not arms, till urg'd by self-defence,
The eldest law of nature.

His labour and study would have shewn his early mistakes, and cured him of self-flattering delusions.

This is not to be done in a rash and self-sufficient manner; but with an humble dependance on divine grace, while we walk among foules.

The religion of Jesus, with all its self-denials, virtues, and devotions, is very practicable.

I heard in Crete this island's name;
For 'twas in Crete, my native soil, I came

Self-banish'd thence.
Achilles's courage is furious and untractable, that of Ajax is heavy and self-confiding.

I doom, to fix the gallant ship,
A mark of vengeance on the table deep;
To warn the thoughtless self-confiding train
No more noli me tangere than to brave the main.

What is boot love? a transient gust,
A vapour fed from wild desire,
A wand'ring self-confuming fire.

In dubious thought the king awaits,
And self-considering, as he stands, debates.

By mighty Jove's command,
Unwilling have I trod this pleasing land;
For who self-mov'd with weary wing would sweep
Such length of ocean?

They who reach Parthia's lofty crown
Employ their palms to span foms others down;
And, while self-love each jealous winter rules,
Contenting wits be so the sport of fools.

It may be thought that Ulysses here is too observations, and that he dwells more than modestly allows upon his own accomplishments; but self-praise is sometimes no fault.

No wonder such a spirit, in such a situation, is provoked beyond the regards of religion, or self-conversion.

SELVHEAL. n. f. [brunella, Lat.] A plant, the same with janicle.

SELVISH. adj. [from self.] Attentive only to one's own interest; void of regard for others.

What could the most aspiring selfish man desire more, were he to form the notion of a being to whom he would recommend himself, than such a knowledge as can discover the least appearance of perfection, and such a goodness as will proportion a reward to it?

Passions, though selfish, if their means be fair, last under reason, and deserve her care;
Those that imparted court a nobler aim,
Exalt their kind, and take some virtue's name.

SELFISHNESS. n. f. [from selfish.] Attention to his own interest, without any regard to others; self-love.

This sublimer love, being, by an intimate conjunction with its object, thoroughly refined from all base dross of selfishness and interest, nobly begets a perfect subjection of our wills to the will of God.

SELFISHLY. adv. [from selfish.] With regard only to his own interest; without love of others.

He can your merit selfishly approve,
And shew the taste of it without the love.

SELFISHLY. adj. [self and same.] Exactly the same.

I have no great cause to look for other than the self-same portion and lot, which your manner hath been hitherto to lay on them that concur not in opinion with you.

Flight pursued one way the self-same hour.
I have been here,
Bare even to him from whom I did receive
All that a son could to a parent give;

Behold me punish'd in the self-same kind;

A gallant knight he was, his name was semblable, semblable furnish'd like the king himself.

SEMBLANCE. n. f. [semblance, French, from semblant.] 1. Likeness; resemblance; similitude; representation.

Solicit Henry with her wond'rous praise,
Belink thee on her virtues, that surround
Her natural graces, that extinguish art.
Repeat their semblance often.

She's but the sign and semblance of her house,
Behold how like a maid the blouses here!

O, what authority and shew of truth
Can cunning sin cover itself withal!

He with high words, that bore
Semblance of worth, not substance, gently ran d
Their fainting courage, and dispell'd their fears.

This last effort brought forth the opinion, that these bodies are not what they seem to be, that they are no shells, but mere sportings of active nature, and only semblances or imitations of shells.

It is not his meaning that we put on the outward face and semblance of virtue, only to conceal and disguise our vice.

2. Appearance; show; figure.
Be you the soldier, for you lookt are,
For mainly semblance, and for skill in war.

arsenicks, bismuth, zinc, with its ore calamine: to these may be added the semimetallick recements, lumpy and pampholyx. Hill.

SEMINAL. adj. [seminal, Fr. seminis,
Latin.]

1. Belonging to seed.

2. Contained in the seed; radical.
Had our senses never presented us with those obvious seminal principles of apparent generation, we should never have suspected that a plant or animal would have proceeded from such unlikely materials. Gianville.

Though we cannot prolong the period of a commonwealth beyond the decree of heaven, or the date of its nature, any more than human life beyond the strength of the seminal virtue, yet we may impute a sickly constitution, and preclude a strong one. Scott.

SEMINALITY. n. f. [from semen, Lat.]

1. The nature of seed.

As though there were a seminality in a tree, or that, like the seed, it carried with it the idea of every part, they can give us behold therein the

10. Meaning; import.

In this sense, to be preferred from sin is not impossible.

My hearty friends, You take me in too dolorous a sense.
A low, silly presumption, that because we are encouraged to believe that in some sense all things are made for man, that therefore they are not made at all for themselves.

All before Richard I. is before time of memory; and what is since, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory.

In one sense it is, indeed, a building of gold and silver upon the foundation of Christianity.

When a word has been used in two or three senses, and has made a great inroad for error, drop one or two of those senses, and leave it only one remaining, and add the other senses or ideas to other words.

SENSED. part. [from sense.] Perceived by the senses. Not in use.

Let the schoolist tell me, why things must needs be so as his individual senses represent them: is he sure that objects are not otherwise sensed by others, than they are by him? And why must his sense be the infallible criterion? It may be, what is white to us, is black to negroes.

SENSEFUL. adj. [from sense and full.] Reasonable; judicious. Not used.

Men, otherwise senseful and ingenious, quote such things out of an author as would never pass in conversation.

SENSELESS. adj. [from sense.] Wanting sense; wanting life; void of all life or perception.

The charm and venom which they drunk Their blood with secret fith infected both, Being diffused through the senseful's trunk, That through the great contagion dash'd deadly drunk.

The ears are senseful's that should give us hearing, To tell him his commandment is fulfill'd.

It is as repugnant to the idea of senseful's matter, that it should put into itself sense, perception, and knowledge, as it is repugnant to the idea of a triangle, that it should put into itself greater angles than two right ones.

2. Unfeeling; wanting sympathy.

The senseful's grave feels not your pious sorrows

3. Unreasonable; stupid; doltish; blockish.

They would repent this senseful's perverseness when it would be too late, and when they found themselves under a power that would destroy them.

If we be not extremely foolish, thoughtless, or senseful's, a great joy is more apt to come to us than a great trouble is.

The great design of this author's book is to prove this, which I believe no man in the world was ever to senseful's us to deny.

She saw her favour was misplac'd; The fellows had a wretched object.

They were a senseful's stupid race.

4. Contrary to true judgment; contrary to reason.

It is a senseful's thing, in reason, to think that one of these interests can stand without the other, when, in the very order of natural causes, government is preserved by religion.

Old creatures, as well as monkeys, little wiser than the young they rear by senseful's touch, and too much embracing.

5. Wanting sensibility; wanting quickness or keenness of perception. Not in use.

To draw Mars like a young Hippolitus, with an effeminate countenance, or that hot-spurred Hercules in Virgil, proceedeth from a senseful's and over-cold judgment.

6. Wanting knowledge; unconscious; with of.

The wretch is drench'd too deep; His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep, Fatten'd in vice; so callous and so gross, He sins and sees not, senseful's of his loss.

You unhouse'd, lawless, rambling libertines, Senseful's of any charm in love, beyond The prostitution of a common bed.

SENSELESSLY. adv. [from senseful's.] In a senseful's manner; stupidly; unreasonably.

If any one should be found so senseful's arrogant as to suppose man alone knowing and wise, but yet the product of mere ignorance and chance, and that all the rest of the universe acted only by that blind hap-hazard, I shall leave with him that very rational and emphatical rebuke of Tully.

SENSELESSNESS. n. s. [from senseful's.]

Folly; unreasonableness; absurdity; stupidity.

The senseful's of the tradition of the crocodile's moving his upper jaw, is plain, from the articulation of the occiput with the neck, and the other jaw with the upper.

SENSIBILITY. n. s. [sensibilité, French.]

1. Quickness of sensation.

Modesty is a kind of quick and delicate feeling in the soul; it is such an exquisite sensibility, as warns a woman to shun the first appearance of every thing hostile.

SENSIBLE. adj. [sensible, Fr. sensibilis, Lat.]

1. Having the power of perceiving by the senses.

Would your cambric were as sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity.

These be those discourses of God, whose effects, those that live witness in themselves; the sensible in their sensible minutes, the reasonable in their reasonable souls.

A blind man conceives not colours, but under the notion of some other sensible faculty.

2. Perceptible by the senses.

By reason man attaineth unto the knowledge of things that are and are not sensible: it is, therefore, that we search how man attaineth unto the knowledge of such things unfeeling as are to be known.

Is this a dagger which I see before me, The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee.

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still: Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible To feeling as to sight?

The space left and acquired in every sensible movement in such slow progressions, is so inconsiderable, that it cannot possibly move the sense.

It is wonderful that the heavens are void of all sensible influence, and by consequence of all sensible matter.

The greater part of men are not otherwise moved than by sense, and have neither leisure nor ability to improve their power of reflection, as to be capable of conceiving the divine perfections, without the assistance of sensible objects.

Air is sensible to the touch by its motion, and by its resistance to bodies moved in it.

3. Perceived by the mind.

Idleness was punished by too many stripes in publick, and the disgrace was more sensible than the pain.

4. Perceiving by either mind or senses;

The salts of human mine may, by the violent motion of the blood, be turned alkaline, and even corrosive; and to they affect the fibres of the brain more sensibly than other parts. Arbuthnot.

2. With perception of either mind or body.

3. Externally; by impression on the senses.
That church of Christ, which we properly term his body mystical, can be but one; neither can that one be sensibly discerned by any, inasmuch as the parts thereof are some in heaven already with Christ. Hooker.

4. With quick intellectual perception.

5. [In low language.] Judiciously; reasonably.

SENSITIVE. adj. [from sensitivus, Fr.] Having sense or perception, but not reason.

The sensitive faculty may have a just or love of some sensitive objects, which though moderated to us not to fall into sin, yet, through the nature of men's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards that inferior object than towards God; this is a piece of human frailty. Hammond.

All the actions of the sensitive appetite are in printing called passions, because the soul is agitated by them, and because the body itself is and is sensibly altered. Dryden.

Bodies are such as are endowed with a vegetative soul, as plants; a sensitive soul, as animals; or a rational soul, as the body of man. Ray.

SENSITIVE Plant. n. f. [mirabilis, Lat.] A plant.

The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, having in my stamina in the centre; these flowers are collected into a round head: from the bottom of the flower rises the pistillum, which afterwards becomes an oblong jointed pod, which opens both ways, and contains in each partition one roundish seed. Of this plant the humble plants are a species, which are so called, because, upon being touched, the pedicle of their leaves falls downward; but the leaves of the sensitive plant are only contracted. Müller.

Vegetables have, many of them some degrees of motion, and, upon the different application of other bodies to them, do very briskly alter their figure and motion, and so have obtained the name of sensitive plants, from a motion which has some resemblance to that which in animals follows upon sensation. Locke.

Whence does it happen that the plant, which well we name the sensitive, should move and feel?
Whence know her leaves to answer her command,
And with quick horror fly the neighbouring hand?
Prior.

The sensitive plant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, the leaf shrinks. Mortimer.

SENSITIVELY. adv. [from sensitive.] In a sensitive manner.

The sensitive faculty, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards an inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of frailty. Hammond.

SENSORIUM. } n. f. [Latin.]
SENSORY.

1. The part where the senses transmit their perceptions to the mind; the seat of sense.

Spiritual species, both visible and audible, will work upon the sensories, though they move not any other body. Bacon.

As found in a bell, or musical string, or other sounding body, is nothing but a trembling motion, and the air nothing but that motion propagated from the object, in the sensory 'tis a sense of that motion under the form of sound. Newton.

Is not the sensory of animals the place to which the sensitive substance is present, and into which the sensible species of things are carried through the nerves of the brain, that there they may be perceived by their immediate presence to that substance? Newton.

2. Organ of sensation.

That we all have double sensories, two eyes, two ears, is an effectual confutation of this atheistical sophism. Bentley.

SENSUAL. adj. [from sensualis, French.]

1. Consisting in sense; depending on sense; affecting the senses.

Men in general are too partial in favour of a sensual appetite, to take notice of truth when they have found it. L'Estrange.

Far as creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual, mental powers ascends. Pope.

2. Pleasing to the senses; carnal; not spiritual.

The greatest part of men are such as prefer their own private good before all things, even that good which is sensual before whatsoever is most divine. Hooker.

3. Devoted to sense; lewd; luxurious.

From amidst them rose
Behal, the dissolute spirit that fell;
The sensualist, and after him
The dissolute, incubus. Milton.

No small part of virtue consists in abstaining from that wherein sensual men place their felicity. Atterbury.

SENSUALIST. n. f. [from sensualis.] A carnal person; one devoted to corporal pleasures.

Latitudinaries and sensualists satisfy themselves as they are able, the former of which will bud, that, as long as reason keeps her ground, religion neither can nor will lose hers. South.

SENSUALITY. n. f. [from sensualis.] Devotedness to the senses; addition to brutal and corporal pleasures.

But you are more intemperate in your blood
Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals
That rage in savage sensuality. Shakspeare.

Kill not her quickning power with surfeitings;
Nor not her sense with sensuality.

Cut not her serious wit on idle things;
Make not her free-will slave to vanity. Dryden.

Sensuality is one kind of pleasure, such an one as is.

They avoid dress, lest they should have affections tainted by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort and delight of their whole beings. Addison.

Impure and brutal sensuality was too much confirmed by the religion of those countries, where even Venus and Bacchus had their temples. Bentley.

TO SENSUALIZE. v. a. [from sensualis.]

To sink to sensual pleasures; to debase the mind into insipidity to the senses.
Not to suffer one's self to be sensualized by pleasures, like those who were changed into brutes by vice. Pope.

SENSUALLY. adv. [from sensualis.] In a sensual manner.

SENSUOUS. adj. [from sensu.] Tender; pathetic; full of passion. Not in use.

To this poetry would be made precedent, as being less sublime and fine; but more simple, sensuous, and passionate. Mason.

SENT. The participle past of send.

I make a decree that all Israel go with thee, forasmuch as thou art sent of the king. 1 Macc.

SENTENCE. n. f. [from sententia, Fr. sententia, Latin.]

1. Determination or decision, as of a judge; civil or criminal.

The rule of voluntary agents on earth is the sentence that reason giveth, concerning the goods of those things which they are to do. Hooker.

If we have neither voice from heaven, that is promulgation of them, neither sentences of men grounded upon such manifest and clear proofs, that, in whose hands it is to alter them, may like wise infallibly, even in law and conscience, judge them so; upon necessity to urge alteration, is to trouble and disturb without necessity. Hooker.

How will I give sentences against them. Jerome.

It matter of fact breaks out with too great an evidence to be denied, why, full there are sentences, that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decretory rigours of a condemning sentence. South.

Let him set out some of Luther's works, that by them we may pass sentences upon his doctrines. Atterbury.

2. It is usually spoken of condemnation pronounced by the judge; doom.

By the content of all laws, in capital cases, evidence must be full and clear; and if, where one man's life is in question, what say we to war, which is ever the sentence of death upon many? Bacon.

What rests but that the mortal sentences pass? Shakspeare.

3. A maxim; an axiom, generally moral.

A sentence may be defined a moral instruction couched in a few words. Bacon.

4. A short paragraph; a period in writing.

An excellent spirit, knowledge, and eloquence, and shewing of hard sentences were found in David. Psalm.

TO SENTENCE. v. a. [from sententia, Fr. sententia, Latin.]

1. To pass the last judgment on any one.

After this cold confidence, sentences me,
And, as you are a king, speak in your state,
What I have done that misbecame my place shall Come the mild judge and intercessor both.
To sentence man. Mason.

2. To condemn; to doom to punishment.

Could that decree from our brother come?
Nature herself is sentenced in your doom.
Pity is no more. Shakspeare.

Idleness, sentenced by the decurions, is punished by many stripes. Terence.

SENTENTIOSITY. n. f. [from sententia.]

Comprehension in a sentence.

Vulgar precepts in morality carry with them nothing above the line, or beyond the extemporary sententiousness of common counsels with us. Bacon.

SENTENTIOUS. adj. [from sententia, Fr. sententia, Latin.]

1. Abounding with sentences, axioms, and maxims, short and energetic.

He is very swift and sententious.
Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues.
Sententious flowers! O let them talk! Crabbe.

Eloquence, with all her pomp and charms,
Foretold us useful and sententious to this. Hooker.

How he spurs his fire, Ambitiously sententious. Addison.

Comprising sentences.

The making of figures being tedious, and requiring much room, put men first upon contracting them, as by the most ancient Egyptian monuments it appears they did: next, instead of sententious marks, to think of verbal, such as the Chinese still retain. Grew.

SENTENTIOUSLY. adv. [from sententious.]

In short sentences; with striking brevity. They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously: they say, look how many feathers she hath, so many eyes she hath underneath. Bacon.
Nauicaa delivers her judgment sententiously, to give it more weight. Broome.

SENTENTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from sententious.]

Pithiness of sentences; brevity with strength. The Medea I esteem for the gravity and sententiousness of it, which he himself concludes to be suitable to a tragedy. Dryden.

SENTINEL. n. f. [This is commonly written sentry, corrupted from sentinel.] One who is set to watch in a garrison, or in the outlines of an army.

What strength, what art, can then suffice, or what evasion bear him safe Through the strict sentinels, and stations thick Of angels watching round? Milton.

SENTIENT. adj. [sentiens, Lat.] Perceiving; having perception.

The acting of the sentient phantasy is performed by a presence of sense, as the horie is under the sense of hunger, and that, without any formal syllogism, preleth him to eat. Hale.

SENTIENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] He that has perception.

If the sentient be carried, passibus æquis, with the body whole motion it would observe, supposing it regular, the remove is insensible. Glanville.

SENTIMENT. n. f. [sentiment, Fr.]

1. Thought; notion; opinion.

The consideration of the reason why they are annexed to so many other ideas, serving to give us due sentiments of the wisdom and goodness of the sovereign Disposer of all things, may not be unsuitable to the main end of these enquiries. Locke.

Alike to council or th' assembly came, With equal souls and sentiments the same. Pope.

2. The sense considered distinctly from the language or things; a striking sentence in a composition.

Those who could no longer defend the conduct of Cato, praised the sentiments. Dennis.

In a secret vale the Trojan fires A separate love. Dryden.

4. Disunited from the body; disengaged from corporeal nature. An emphatical sense.

Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it can retain without the help of the body too; or else the soul or any separate spirit, will have but little advantage by thinking. Locke.

SEPARATELY. adv. [from separate.]

Apart; singly; not in union; distinctly; particularly.

It is of singular use to princes, if they take the opinions of their council both separately and together; for private opinion is more free, but opinion before others is more reserved. Bacon.

If you admit of many figures, conceive the whole together, and not every thing separately and in particular. Dryden.

SEPARATENESS. n. f. [from separate.]

The state of being separate.

SEPARATION. n. f. [separatio, Lat. separatio, Fr. from separate.]

1. The act of separating; disjunction.

They have a dark opinion, that the soul doth live after the separation from the body. Abbot.

Any part of our bodies, vitally united to that which is conscious in us, makes a part of ourselves; but upon separation from the vital union, by which that consciousness is communicated, that, which a moment since was part of ourselves, is now no more so. Locke.

2. The state of being separate; disunion.

As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language was a mark of union. Bacon.

3. The chymical analysis, or operation of disuniting things mingled.

A fifteenth part of silver, incorporated with gold, will not be recovered by any matter of separation, unless you put a greater quantity of silver, which is the last refuge in separations. Bacon.

4. Divorce; disjunction from a married state.

Did you not hear A buzzing of a separation Between the king and Catharine? Shakspere.

SEPARATIST. n. f. [separatiste, Fr. from separate.]

For our abridged and septuagesimal age, it is very rare to behold the fourth generation. Brown.

SEPTUAGINT. n. f. [septuaginta, Latin.] The old Greek version of the Old Testament, so called as being supposed the work of seventy-two interpreters.

Which way soever you try, you shall find the product great enough for the extent of this earth; 2 and if you follow the septuagesimal chronology, it will still be far higher. Barnet.

SEPTUPLE. adj. [septuplex, Lat. Seven times as much.] A technical term.

SEPTULCHRAL. adj. [sepulchral, Fr. sepulchralis, from sepulchrum, Lat.] Relating to burial; relating to the grave; monumental.

Whilst our souls negotiate there, We like sepulchral statues lay; All day the same our postures were, And we said nothing all the day. Donne.

Mine eye hath found that sepulchral rock, That was the casket of heaven's richest store. Milton.

Sepulchral lies our holy walls to grace, And new-year odes, &c. Pope.

SEPULCHRE. n. f. [sepulchre, Fr. sepulchrum, Lat.] A grave; a tomb.

To entomb him and his heirs unto the crown, What is it but to make thy sepulchre? Shakespeare.

Flies and spiders get a sepulchre in amber, more durable than the monument and embalming of any king. Bacon.

There, where the virgin's son his doctrine taught, His miracles, and her redemption wrought; Where I, by thee inspir'd, his praise sung, And on his sepulchre my offering hung. Sandys.

Perpetual lamps for many hundred years have continued burning, without supply, in the sepulchres of the ancients. Wilkins.

It not one common sepulchre contains Our bodies, or one urn our last remains, Yet Cyx and Alcyon shall join. Dryden.

TO SEPULCHRE. v. a. [from the noun.] It is accented on the second syllable by Shakespeare and Milton; on the first, more properly, by Jonson and Prior. To bury; to entomb.

Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence; Or, at the least, in her sepulchre thine. Shakespeare.

I am glad to see that time survive, Where merit is not sepulchred alive; Where good men's virtues them to honours bring, And not to dangers. Ben Jonson.

Thou to sepulchred in such pomp dost lie, That kings for such a tomb would wish to die. Milton.

Disparted streams shall from their channels fly, And, deep farc'd, by sandy mountains lie Obscurely sepulchred. Prior.

SEPULTURE. n. f. [sepulture, Fr. sepultura, Lat.] Interment; burial.

That Niobe, weeping over her children, was turned into a stone, was nothing else but that during her life she erected over her sepulture a marble tomb of her own. Brown.

Where we may royal sepulture prepare; With speed to Melinda bring relief, Recall her spirits, and moderate her grief. Dryden.

In England, sepulture or burial of the dead may be deferred and put off for the debts of the person deceased. Ayleffe.

SEQUE'CIOS. adj. [sequacis, Lat.]

1. Following; attendant. Orpheus could lead the savage race, And trees uprooted left their place, Sequacious of the lyre; But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher: When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n, An angel heard, And straight appear'd, Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryden.

Above those superstitious horrors that enslave The fond sequacious herd, to my sick faith And blind amazement prone, th' enlighten'd few The glorious stranger hail. Thomson.

2. Ductile; pliant. In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious, and obedient to the hand and stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, or moulded. Ray.

SEQUACITY. n. f. [from sequax, Latin.] Ductility; toughness.

Matter, whereof creatures are produced, hath a ductness, lenter, and sequacity. Bacon.

SEQUEL. n. f. [sequelle, Fr. sequela, Lat.]

1. Conclusion; succeeding part. If black scandal or foul-lac'd reproach Attend the sequel of your imposition, Your meek enforcement shall acquaintance me. Shakespeare.

Was he not a man of wisdom? Yes, but he was poor; but was he not also successful? True, but he was poor; grant this, and you cannot keep that unavoidable sequel in the next verse, the man's wisdom is despised. Shakespeare.

2. Consequence; event. Let any principal thing, as the sun or the moon, but once cease, fall, or interweave, and who can easily conceive that the sequel thereof will ruin both to itself and whatsoever depends on it? Shakespeare.

In these he put two weights, The sequel each of parting and of fight. Shakespeare.

3. Consequence inferred; consequentia.

What sequel is there in this argument? A deacon is the chief deacon; ergo, he is a deacon. Shakespeare.

SEQUENCE. n. f. [from sequor, Lat.]

1. Order of succession. An elegant word, but little used. How art thou a king, But by fair sequence and succession? Shakespeare.

2. Series; arrangement; method. The cause proceedeth from a precedent sequence and series of the seasons of the year. Bacon.

SEQUEST. adj. [sequens, Latin.]

1. Following; succeeding. Let my trial be mine own confession: Immediate sentence then, and sequent death, Is all the grace I beg. Shakespeare.

There he dies, and leaves his race Growing into a nation; and now grows Subjected to a sequent king, who seeks To stop their overgrowth. Milton.

2. Consequential.

SE'QUEST. n. f. [from the adjective.] A follower. Not in use.

Here he hath framed a letter to a sequest of stranger queen's, which at incidentally learned. Shakespeare.

TO SEQUESTER. v. a. [sequester, Fr. sequester, Spanish; sequestra, low Latin.]

1. To separate from others for the sake of privacy. Why are you sequestered from all your train? Shakespeare.

To the which place a poor sequestered man, That from the hunter's aim had taken a hurt, Did come to languish. Shakespeare.

In shady bow'r More sacred and sequestered, though but for a Pan or Sylvanus never slept. Shakespeare.

Ye sacred Nine! that all my soul possess, Whole raptures fire me, and whole visions bless, Bear me, oh bear me, to sequestered scenes Of bow'r's, meads, and surrounding greens. Pope.

2. To put aside; to remove. Although I had wholly sequestered my affairs, yet I set down, out of experience in business, and conversation in books, what I thought pertinent to this affair. Bacon.

3. To withdraw; to segregate. A thing as reasonable in grief as in joy, is present being added unto actions of great wit and solemnity, as being used when men will sequester themselves from action. Shakespeare.

4. To set aside from the use of the world to that of others: as, his annuity is sequestered to pay his creditors.

5. To deprive of possessions. It was his taylor and his cook, his five followers and his French ragouts, which sequestered him, and, in a word, he came by his poverty as naturally as some usually do by their riches. Shakespeare.

SEQUESTERABLE. adj. [from sequester, Lat.]

1. Subject to privation.

2. Capable of separation. Harthorn, and divers other bodies belonging to the animal kingdom, abounded with a not unuseful

seraphic life.

SEQUESTERATE. v. n. To sequester;
 to separate.

In general contagions, more perils for want of necessities, than by the malignity of the disease, they being sequestered from mankind. Arbuthnot.
SEQUESTRATION. n. f. [sequestration, French; from sequestrare.]

Separation; retirement.

His addiction was to courtes vain;

He never noted in him any study,

Any retirement, any sequestration

From open haunts and popularity. Shakespeare.

There must be leisure, retirement, solitude, and a sequestration of a man's self from the noise of the world, for truth seems to be seen by eyes much less than interior objects. South.

1. Disunion; disjunction.

The metals remain unseparated, the fire only dissolving the body into smaller particles, hindering it and continuity, without any sequestration of elementary principles. Boyle.

2. State of being set aside.

Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,

Let me whose glory I was great in arms,

No sequestration have I had. Shaksp.

Deprivation of the use and profits of a possession.

Is there be a single spot in the globe more bar-ren, the vector or view may be obliged, by the voice or pulse of the bishop, to build upon it, under pain of sequestration. Swift.

SEQUESTERATOR. n. f. [from sequestrare.]
 One who takes from a man the profit of his possessions.

I am fallen into the hands of publicans and sequef- trators, and they have taken all from me. Taylor.

SERAGLIO. n. f. [Italian; perhaps of oriental origin.] The g is lost in the pronunciation.] A house of women kept for debauchery.

There is a great deal more solid content to be met in a constant course of well living, than in voluptuousness of a seraglio. Norris.

SERAPH. n. f. [שראף.] One of the orders of angels.

He infinitely more remote, in the real excellency his nature, from the highest and perfectest of all created beings, than the purest seraph is from the most exalted part of matter, and consequently infinitely exceed what our narrow understandings can conceive of him. Leake.

As fully as portet, in vile man that inquires,
 The seraph that adores and burns. Pope.

SERAPHICAL. adj. [seraphique, French;
seraphick, from seraph.]

Angelick; angelical.

Love is curious of little things, desiring to be of celestial purity, of perfect innocence, and sera- phical favour. Taylor.

Scaph arms and trophies.

Pure; refused from sensuality.

Is to the world a secret yet,

Which the nymph, to please her swain,

As on a high romantick stream;

Whether he at last descends

Like with less seraphick ends. Swift.

SERAPHIM. n. f. [This is properly the plural of seraph, and therefore cannot have s added; yet, in compliance with our language, seraphims is sometimes written.] Angels of one of the heavenly orders.

To these cherubim and seraphim continually do they. Common Prayer.

Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having the coal in his hand. Isaiah.

Of seraphim another row.

SERE. adj. [reapian, Saxon, to dry.]
 Dry; withered; no longer green. See
SEAR.

The mules, that were wont green boys to wear:
 Now bringen bitter elder-branches seré. Spenser.
 He is deformed, crooked, old, and seré.
 Ill-fac'd, worle bodied, shapeless every where;
 Vicious, ungentle. Shakespeare.

Are this diurnal star
 Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams

Reflected may with matter seré foment. Milton.

They seré wood from the rotten hedges took,

And seeds of latent fire from flints provoke Dryden.

On a seré branch,

Low bending to the bank, I sat me down,

Musing and still. Rome.

SERE. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor, except from this passage, the meaning. Can it come, like theirs, from serpan, Saxon, to ent?] Claw;
 talon.

Two eagles,

That mounted on the wings, together still

Their strokes extended; but arriving now

Amidst the council, over every brow

Shook their thick wings, and threatening death's cold fears,

Their necks and cheeks tore with their eager seres.

Chapman.

SERENADE. n. f. [serenade, French;
serenata, Italian; whence, in Milton,
serenate, from serenus, Latin; the lovers commonly attending their mistresses in fair nights.] Musick or songs with which ladies are entertained by their lovers in the night.

Thy muddy beverage to serene, and drive

Precipitant the baser rosy lees. Philips.

SERENELY. adv. [from serene.]

1. Calmly; quietly.

The setting sun now shone serenely bright.

Pope.

2. With unruffled temper; coolly.

Whatever practical rule is generally laid on, can not be supposed innate, it being impossible that men would, without shame or fear, confidently and se- renely break a rule, which they could not but evidently know that God had set up. Locke.

The nymph did like the teene appear,

Serenely pleasant, calmly fair.

So tell her words as flow the air. Prior.

SERENESS. n. f. [from serene.] Seren- ity.

SERENITUDE. n. f. [from serene.] Calm- ness; coolness of mind. Not in use.

From the equal distribution of the phlegmatick humour will flow quiescence and serenitude in the affections. Whiston.

SERENITY. n. f. [Serenité, French; from serenus, Latin.]

1. Calmness; mild temperate.

In the constitution of a perpetual equinox, the best part of the globe would be deplete, and as to that little that would be inhabited, there is no reason to expect that it would constantly enjoy that admired calm and serenity. Hentley.

Pure serenity as pure

Induces thought, and contemplation still. Thomson.

2. Peace; quietness; not disturbance.

A general peace and serenity newly succeeded a general trouble and cloud throughout all his kingdoms. Temple.

3. Evenness of temper; coolness of mind.

I cannot see how any men should ever transcend those moral rules, with confidence and se- renity, were they innate, and stamped upon their minds. Leake.

SERGE. n. f. [serge, French; serga, Spanish, which Covarruvias derives from sera, Arabic; Sanner from serge, German, a mat.] A kind of woollen cloth.

The same wool one man felt into a hat, another weaves into cloth, another into kersey or serge, and another into arras. Hale.

Ye weavers, all your shuttles throw,

And bid bro of cloths and serges grow. Gay.

SERGEANT. n. f. [sergent, Fr. sergente, Italian, from serenus, Latin.]

1. An officer whose business it is to execute the commands of magistrates.

Had I but time, I should tell sergeants, Death, servants: as, sergeant chamberlain; that is, a chamberlain sergent to the king.

SERGEANTRY. n. f. [from sergeant.]

Grand sergeantry is that which one lord leih lands of the king by serge, which he ought to do in his own person unto him: as to bear the king's banner or his spear, or to lead his host, or to be his marshal, or to blow a horn, when he forth his enemies invade the land; or to find a man at arms to fight within the four seas, or else to do himself; or to bear the king's sword before him at his coronation, or on that day to be his sewer, carver, butler, or chamberlain. Petit sergeantry is where a man holdeth land of the king, to yield him yearly some small thing toward his wars, as a sword, dagger, bow, knife, spear, pair of gloves of mail, a pair of spurs, or such like. Cowell.

SERGEANTSHIP. n. f. [from sergeant.]

The office of a sergeant.

SERIES. n. f. [serie, Fr. series, Latin.]

1. Sequence; order.

Draw out that antecedent, by reflecting briefly upon the text, as it lies in the series of the epistle.

The chains of the correspondence I cannot supply, having destroyed too many letters to preserve any series.

2. Succession; course.

This is the series of perpetual war, Which thou, alas! and thine are born to know.

SERIOUS. adj. [serius, Fr. serius, Lat.]

1. Grave; solemn; not volatile; not light of behaviour.

Al! my friends! while we laugh, all things are serious round about us: God is serious, who exerciseth patience towards us; Christ is serious, who shed his blood for us; the Holy Ghost is serious, who striveth against the obduracy of our hearts; the holy Scriptures bring to our ears the most serious things in the world; the holy sacraments represent the most serious and awful matters; the whole creation is serious in serving God; and us; all that are in heaven or hell are serious: how then can we be gay? To give these excellent words their full force, it should be known that they came not from the priesthood, but the court; and from a courtier as eminent as England ever boasted.

2. Important; weighty; not trifling.

I'll hence to London on a serious matter.

There's nothing serious in mortality; All is but toys.

SERIOUSLY. adv. [from serious.] Gravely; solemnly; in earnest; without levity.

It cannot but be matter of very dreadful consideration to any one, sober and in his wits, to think seriously with himself, what horror and confusion must needs surprise that man, at the last day of account, who had led his whole life by one rule, when God intends to judge him by another.

Unthinking planners to o'erspread thy mind, That thou could'st seriously persuade the crowd To keep their oaths, and to believe a God.

Julian Martyr, Tertullian, Lactantius, and Ambrosius, tell us, that this martyrdom first of all made them seriously inquisitive into that religion, which could endure the mind with so much strength, and overcome the fear of death, nay, raise an earnest desire of it, though it appeared in all its terrors.

SERIOUSNESS. n. f. [from serious.] Gravity; solemnity; earnest attention.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of libertinism and profaneness started up in the room of it.

The youth was received at the door by a servant, who then conducted him with great silence and seriousness to a long gallery, which was darkened at noon-day.

SERMOCINATION. n. f. [sermocinatio, Latin.] The act or practice of making speeches.

SERMOCINATOR. n. f. [sermocinator, Lat.] A preacher; a speechmaker.

These obsequious sermocinators make easy impression upon the minds of the vulgar.

SERMON. n. f. [sermon, Fr. sermo, Lat.]

A discourse of instruction pronounced by a divine for the edification of the people.

As for our sermons, be they never so found and perfect, God's word they are not, as the sermons of the prophets were; no, they are but unambiguously termed his word, because his word is commonly the subject whereof they treat, and must be the rule whereby they are framed.

This one life, exempt from publick haunt, Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in flowers, and good in every thing.

Sermons he heard, yet not so many As left no time to practice any:

S E R

He heard them reverently, and then His practice preach'd them o'er again. Craik. Many, while they have preached Christ in their sermons, have read a lecture of atheism in their practice.

His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;

A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden. To SERMON. v. d. [sermoner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To discourse as in a sermon.

Some would rather have good discipline delivered plainly by way of precept, or sermoned at large, than thus cloudily inwrapped in allegorical devices.

2. To tutor; to teach dogmatically; to lesson.

Come, sermon me no farther: No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart.

SERMOUNTAIN, or Sefedi. n. f. [Silex, Latin.] A plant.

SERO'SITY. n. f. [serosité, French.] Thin or watery part of the blood.

In this the salt and lividated serosity is divided between the guts and the bladder; but it remains undivided in birds.

The tumour of the throat, which occasions the difficulty of swallowing and breathing, proceeds from a serosity obstructing the glands, which may be watery, adenomatose, or scirrhus, according to the viscosity of the humour.

SEROUS. adj. [serous, Fr. serosus, Lat.]

1. Thin; watery. Used of the part of the blood which separates in congelation from the grumous or red part.

2. Adapted to the serum. This delicate is commonly an extravasation of serum, received in some cavity of the body; for there may be also a drop of a dilatation of the serous vessels, as that in the ovarium.

SERPENT. n. f. [serpens, Latin.] An animal that moves by undulation without legs. They are often venomous. They are divided into two kinds: the vipera, which brings young; and the snake, that lays eggs.

She was arrayed all in hly white, And in her right hand bore a serp of gold, With wine and water fill'd up to the height; In which a serpent did himself unfold, That horror made to all that did behold.

She struck me with her tongue, Most serpent like, upon the very heart.

They, or under ground, or circuit wide, With serpent error wand'ring, found their way.

The chief I challeng'd; he, whose practice'd wit Knew all the serpent mazes of deceit, Flouds my search.

SERPENTINE. adj. [Serpentinus, Latin; from serpent.]

1. Resembling a serpent.

I craved of him to lead me to the top of this rock, with meaning to free him from serpentine a companion as I am.

This of ours is described with legs, wings, a serpentine and winding tail, and a crest or comb somewhat like a cock.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape Like his, and colour serpentine, may shew Thy inward fraud.

The figures and their parts ought to have a serpentine and flaming form naturally: these sorts of outlines have I know not what of life and seeming motion in them, which very much resembles the activity of the flame and serpent.

2. Winding like a serpent; anfractuons.

Perfect a circle, of maintain his way One inch direct; but where he rols to-day He comes no more, but with a cozening line steers by that point, and so is serpentine.

S E R

His hand th' adorned firmament display'd, Thine serpentina yet conduct machine made.

How many spacious countries does the Rhine, In winding banks, and masses serpentine, Traverse, before he splits on Belgia's plain, And, lost in sand, creeps to the German main!

SERPENTINE. n. f. [dracanium,] An herb.

SERPENTINE Stone. n. f.

There were three species of this stone known among the ancients, all resembling one another, and celebrated for the same virtues. The one was green, variegated with spots of black, thence called the black ophites; another, called the white ophite, was green also, but variegated with spots of white, the third was called tephria, and was of a grey colour, variegated with small black spots. The ancients tell us, that it was a certain remedy against the poison of the bite of serpents; but it is now justly rejected.

Accept in good part a bottle made of a serpent stone, which hath the quality to give any wine a water, that shall be infused therein for four or twenty hours, the taste and operation of the water, and is very medicinal for the cure of the spleen and gravel.

SERPENT'S Tongue. n. f. [ophioglossa,] An herb.

2. Usefulness; beneficialness.

All action being for some end, its aptness to be commanded or forbidden must be founded upon its serviceableness or disserviceableness to some end.

SERVILE. adj. [servil, French; servilis, Latin.]

1. Slavish; dependant; mean.

Fight and die, is death destroying death; Where learning dying, pays death's servile breath.

From imposition of strict laws to free Acceptance of large grace, from servile fear To filial.

Ev'n fortune rules no more a servile land, Where exil'd tyrants still by tuns command.

2. Fawning; cringing.

The most servile slavery is lodged the most easily in the greatest capacity, for their ordinary conceit draweth a yielding to their greater, and then have they not wit to discern the right degrees of duty.

She must bend the servile knee, And fawning take the splendid robber's boon.

SERVILELY. adv. [from servile.] Meanly; slavishly.

'T' each changing news they chang'd affections bring, And servilely from fate expect a king.

He affects a singularity in his actions and thoughts, rather than servilely to copy from the wick.

SERVILENESS. } n. f. [from servile.]

1. Subjection; involuntary obedience.

What, besides this unhappy servility to custom, can possibly reconcile men, that own Christianity, to a practice widely distant from it?

The angels and demons, those by their subterfuge, and these by the servility of their obedience, manfully declared Christ and his apostles to be velted with an authority derived from their Lord.

Slavery; the condition of a slave.

To be a queen in bondage, is more vile Than is a slave in base servility.

For princes should be free.

SERVING-MAN. n. f. [serve and man.]

A menial servant.

Your niece did more favours to the duke's serving-man than ever he bestowed on me.

Just in the nick; the cook knock'd thrice, And all the waiters in a trice

His summons did obey;

Each serving-man, with dish in hand, March'd boldly up, like our train'd band,

Presented, and away.

With Dennis you did ne'er combine, Not you, to steal your master's wine;

Except a bottle now and then, To welcome brother serving-men.

SERVITOR. n. f. [servitor, French.]

1. Servant; attendant. A word obsolete.

This workman, whose servitor nature is, being only one, the heathens imagining to be more, gave him in the sky the name of Jupiter; in the air, of Juno; in the water, of Neptune; in the earth, of Vesta and Ceres.

These are poor servitors, When others sleep upon their quiet beds, Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

Fearful commenting Is laden servitor to dull delay;

Delay leads forward and fast-paced beggary.

One who sets under another, a fellow-servitor; one who is under the hands and possessions of such as are his superior.

One who professes duty and obedience. My noble queen, let former grudges pass, And henceforth I am thy true servitor.

One of the lowest order in the university. His learning is much of a size with his birth; a poor servitor can be expected to bring with him his college.

SERVITUDE. n. f. [servitude, French; servitus, Latin.]

Slavery; state of a slave; dependance. Aristotle speaketh of men, whom nature framed for the state of servitude, saying, they are reason so far forth as to conceive when others are better than them.

You would have sold your king to slaughter, His princes and his peers to servitude, His subjects to oppression and contempt. Unjustly thou deprav'st it with the name Of servitude, to serve whom God ordains, Or nature: God and nature bid the same, When he who rules is worthy.

Though it is necessary that some persons in the world should be in love with a splendid servitude, yet certainly they must be much beholding to their own fancy, that they can be pleased at it; for that rises up early, and goes to bed late, only to receive addresses, is really as much abridged in freedom, as he that wants to present one.

Servants collectively. Not in use. After him a cumbrous train Of herds, and flocks, and numerous servitude.

SERVUM. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The thin and watery part that separates from the rest in any liquor, as in milk the whey from the cream.

2. The part of the blood which in coagulation separates from the grume. Blood is the most universal juice in an animal body; the red part of it differs from the serum from the lymph, the lymph from the nervous juice, and that from the several other humors separated in the glands.

SERQUIALTER. } adj. [sesquialtere, Fr. sesquialteral, Latin.]

In geometry, is a ratio where one quantity or number contains another once and half as much more, as 6 and 9.

In all the revolutions of the planets about the sun, and of the secondary planets about the primary ones, the periodical times are in a sesquialteral proportion to the mean distance.

As the six primary planets revolve about the sun, so the secondary ones are moved about them in the same sesquialteral proportion of their periodical motions to their orbs.

SESQUIPEDAL. } adj. [sesquipedalis, Latin.]

Containing a foot and a half. As for my own part, I am but a sesquipedal, having only six foot and a half of stature.

Has thou ever measured the pygmy's stature, whose stature is above eight cubits high, or the sesquipedalian pigmy?

SESQUPLICATE. adj. [In mathematics.]

Is the proportion one quantity or number has to another, in the ratio of one and a half to one.

The periodical times of the planets are in a sesquuplicate proportion, and not a duplicate proportion of the distances from the center of the sun, and consequently the planets cannot be carried about by an harmonically circulating fluid.

SESQUITERTIAN. [In mathematics.]

Having such a ratio, as that one quantity or number contains another once

Homer took all occasions of setting up his own countrymen, the Grecians, and of undervaluing
the Trojan chiefs.

66. To SET up. To establish; to appoint;
to fix.

Whatever practical rule is generally broken, it cannot be supposed innate; it being impossible that men should, without sin or fear, eternally break a rule which they could not but evidently know that God had set up.

67. To SET up. To place in view.

He hath taken me by my neck, shaken me to pieces, and set me up for his mark.

Scarecrows are set up to keep birds from corn

Thy father's merit sets thee up to view,
And shows thee in the fairest point of light,
To make thy virtues or thy faults conspicuous.

68. To SET up. To place in repose; to fix; to rest.

Whilst we sit up our hopes here, we do not sit seriously, as we ought, consider that God has provided another and better place for us.

69. To SET up. To raise by the voice.

My right eye itches, some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amartyll may appear;
I'll set up such a note as the shall hear.

70. To SET up. To advance; to propose to reception.

The authors that set up this opinion were not themselves satisfied with it.

71. To SET up. To raise to a sufficient fortune; to set up a trade; to set up a trader.

In a soldier's life there's honour to be got; and one lucky hit sets up a man for ever.

72. This is one of the words that can hardly be explained otherwise than by various and multiplied exemplification.
It is scarcely to be referred to any radical or primitive notion; it very frequently includes the idea of a change made in the state of the subject, with some degree of continuance in the state superinduced.

To SET. v. n.

1. To fall below the horizon, as the sun at evening.

The sun was set.

Whereas the setting of the pleyades and seven stars is design'd the term of autumn and the beginning of winter, unto some latitudes these stars do never set.

That sun once set, a thousand meander stars
Give a due light to violence and wars.

SET

Now the latter watch of wasting night,
And setting stars, to kindly rest invite.

Not thicker billows beat the Lybian main,
When pale Orion sets in wintry rain,
Than stand these troops.

If he sets industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him.

12. To SET about. To fall to; to begin.

We find it most hard to convince them, that it is necessary now, at this very present, to set about it:
we are thought a little too hot and hasty, when we press wicked men to leave their sins to day, as long as they have so much time before them to do it in.

How preposterous is it, never to set about works of charity, whilst we ourselves can see them performed.

13. To SET in. To become settled in a particular state.

When the weather was set in to be very bad, I have taken a whole day's journey to see a gallery furnished by great masters.

As November set in with keen frosts, so they continued through the whole of that month without any other intermission than freezing with more or less severity, as the winds changed.

A storm accordingly happened the following day;
for a southern monsoon began to set in.

able whether its activity only set out at our nativity, and began not rather in the womb.

17. To SET out. To begin a journey, or course.

At their setting out they must have their commission from the king.

I shall put you in mind where you promised to set out, or begin your first stage.

Me thou think'st not slow,
Who since the morning-hour set out from heaven,
Where God resides, and ere mid-day arriv'd
In Eden.

My soul then mov'd the quicker pace;
Yours first set out, mine reach'd her in the race.

These doctrines, laid down for foundations of science, were called principles, as the beginning from which we must set out, and look no farther backwards.

He that sets out upon weak legs, will not only go further, but grow stronger too, than one who with firm limbs only sits still.

For these reasons I shall set out for London tomorrow.

Look no more on man in the first stage of his existence, in his setting out for eternity.

The dazzling lustre to abate,

ception of the light.

Spring no obstacle found here nor shade,
Nor all sunshine.

2. Darkness; obscurity.
The weaker light unwillingly declin'd,
And to prevailing shades the murmuring world
relign'd.

3. Coolness made by interception of the sun.

Antigonus, when told that the enemy had such volleys of arrows that hid the sun, said, That falls out well; for this is hot weather, and so we shall light in the shade.

That high mount of God, whence light and shade
Shine both.

4. An obscure place, properly in a grove or close wood, by which the light is excluded.

Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there
Weep our sad fustians empty.

Regions of sorrow, doleful shades,
Then to the desert takes his flight;

Where full from shade to shade the Son of God,
After forty days fasting, had remain'd.

The pious prince then seeks the shade
Which hides from fight his venerable mind.

of being shady; umbrageousness.

SHA'DOW. n. f. [reacu, Saxon; schaduw,
Dutch.]

1. The representation of a body by which the light is intercepted.

Poor Tom! proud at heart, to ride over four-inch'd bridges, to count his own shadow for a troop.

Luc's but a walking shadow, a poor player,
That sways and trets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more.

Such a nature,
Tickled with good success, distains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon.

The body, though it moves, yet not changing perceptible distance with some other bodies, the thing seems to stand still, as in the hands of clocks, and shades of lunatics.

2. Opacity; darkness; shade.

By the revolution of the skies
Night's pale shadows from the ocean rise.

His countrymen probably lived within the shade of the earthquake, and shadow of the eclipse.

To pay my penance till my years expire.

5. Dark part of a picture.

A shadow is the diminution of the first and second light. The first light is that which proceeds immediately from a lightened body, as the beams of the sun. The second is an accidental light, spreading itself into the air, or medium, proceeding from the other. Shadows are threefold: the first is a single shadow, and the least of all; and is proper to the plain surface where it is, as wholly possessed of the light. The second is the double shadow, and is used when the surface begins once to be seen your eye, as in columns. The third shadow is made by crossing over your double shadow, and which darkens by a third part. It is used in the most shadows, and forthwith from the light in gulfs, wells, and caves.

After great lights there must be great shadows.

6. Any thing perceptible only to the sight;
a ghost; a spirit, or shade.

Hence, horrible shadow!
Unreal mockery hence!

7. An imperfect and faint representation opposed to substance.

So fair and great, that shadowed all the ground.

The Assyrian was a cedar with fair branch and with a shadowing bround.

2. To cloud; to darken.

Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,
To whom I am a neighbour.

3. To make cool, or gently gloomy, by interception of the light or heat.

A gentle south-west wind comes creeping o'er flowery fields and shadowed waters in the close heat of summer.

4. To conceal under cover; to hide; to screen.

Let every soldier hew him down a bough,
And bear't before him; thereby shall we know
The number of our host, and make discovery
Far in report of us.

5. To protect; to screen from danger, in shroud.

God shall forgive you Cœur de Lion's death
The rather, that you give his offspring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings, and air

6. To mark with various gradations of colour, or light.

Tuneful is made of old linen rag'd and dand in a saucer of vinegar, and set over a charge of coals till it boil, then wring it into a cloth, put it into a little gum arabick, and spread it on a canvas, and all ye flows.

From a round globe of any uniform colour, idea imprinted on our minds is of a body variously shadowed with different degrees of coming to our eyes.

More broken scene, made up of an infinite variety of inequalities and shadowings, that nature mingle from an agreeable mixture of hills, trees, and valleys.

7. To paint in obscure colours.

If the parts be too much distant, so that there be void spaces which are deeply shadowed out, they in those voids some fold, to make a joining of the parts.

8. To represent imperfectly.

S H A

Whereat I wak'd, and found
Before mine eyes all real, as the dream
Had lively shadow'd. Milton.
Augustus is shadowed in the person of Æneas. Dryden.

I have shadowed some part of your virtues under another name. Dryden.

To represent typically.

Many times there are three things said to make up the substance of a sacrament: namely, the grace which is thereby offered, the element which presents it, or signifies grace, and the word which certifies what is done by the element. Hooker.

The word being to defend the body from wear, points aptly shadow out to us the continuance of the suffering, which made him proof to all the attacks of pleasure. Addison.

SHA'DOW GRASS. n. f. [from shadow and grass; griemswyrticam, Lat.] A kind of grass.

SHA'DOWY. adj. [from shadow.]

1. Full of shade; gloomy.

Thou shadowy dell, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns. Shakespeare.

With shadowy verdure flourish'd high,
A sudden youth the groves enjoy. Fenton.

2. Not brightly luminous.

More pleasant light
Shadowy sets off the face of things. Milton.

3. Faintly representative; typical.

When they see
I can discover sin, but not remove Sins by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats; they may conclude
One blood more precious must be paid for man. Milton.

4. Unsubstantial; unreal.

Milton has brought into his poems two actors of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of Adam and Eve; by which he hath interwoven in his tale a very beautiful allegory. Addison.

5. Dark; opaque.

By command, ere yet dim night
Her shadowy cloud withdraws, I am to haste Homeward. Milton.

SHA'DY. adj. [from shade.]

1. Full of shade; mildly gloomy.

The wakeful bird
Sings darkling, and in shady covert had rather mourn than note. Milton.

Stretch'd at ease you sing your happy loves,
And Amalthis fills the shady groves. Dryden.
Secure from the glare of light, or multitudes of heat.

But it also that you may have rooms shady for summer, and warm for winter. Bacon.

SHAF. n. f. [Dutch.]

An arrow; a missile weapon.

To pierce pursuing shield,
The parents train'd, the Tartars wild are taught,
Arch shafts shot out from their back-turned bow. Sidney.

Who, in the spring, from the new sun
The day has a fever got,
And late begins their shafts to fling.
Which Phobus then his veins has shot. Waller.

They are both the archer and shaft taking aim at off, and then shooting themselves directly upon the desired mark. More

As they was the pile, a Parthian bow
And vapour drawn must send the shaft below. Dryden.

[shaft, Dutch.] A narrow, deep, perpendicular pit.

They hark a shaft or pit of six foot in length. Coreus.

The following dump, upon its ascent, gives a shock like the report of a gun, and makes an explosion so forcible as to kill the miners, and force others or great weight from the bottom of the pit through the shaft. Hoadward.

See also a tube, or, as the miners call it, a shaft,
which is a hole, or, as the miners call it, a shaft,
which is a hole, or, as the miners call it, a shaft,
which is a hole, or, as the miners call it, a shaft.

S H A

3. Any thing straight; the spire of a church.

with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple. Peacham.

SHAG. n. f. [Dutch.]

1. Rough woolly hair.

Fall onen, like a shag hair'd crafty kern,
Hath he converted with the enemy.
And given me notice of their villanies. Shakespeare
Where is your husband?
He's a traitor.

Thou lyest, thou shag-ear'd villain! Shakespeare.
From the shag of his body, the shape of his legs,
his having little or no tail, the downiness of his coat, and his climbing up of trees, he seems to come near the bear kind. Coreus.

True Witney broad cloth, with its shag and the thin horsemen's trace. Coreus.

2. A kind of cloth.

SHAG, n. f. [phalacrocorax, Lat.] A sea bird.

Among the first sort we reckon shag, duck, and mallard. Coreus.

SHAGGED. } adj. [from shag.]

SHAGGY. }

1. Rugged; rough; hairy.

They change then hue, with haggard eyes they stare.

Lennare their looks, and shaggy is their hair. Dryden

A lion's hide he wears;
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin,
The teeth and gaping jaws fiercely grin. Dryden
From the frothy north

The early valiant Swede drags forth his wags,
In battalions array, while Volga's stream
Sends opposite, in shaggy uniform cloth,
Her bound rears, on mutual thought bent. Philips.

2. Rough; rugged.

They pluck'd the feated hills with all their load,
Rocks, waters, woods, and by the shaggy tops
Uplifting, bore them in their hands. Milton

There, where every delusion dwells,
Fy grots and caverns shaggy with hoar shades,
She may play on with unblush'd impiety.
Be it not done in pride. Milton.

Through Eden went a river large,
Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy
hull Pass'd underneath unguish'd. Milton.

How would the old king smile
To see you weigh the paw when apt with cold,
And throw the shaggy flocks about your shoulders. Coreus.

Ye rugged rocks! what hol, the slave worn,
Ye grots and caverns shaggy with hoar shades! Pope.

SHAGREEN. n. f. [chagrin, Fr.] The skin of a kind of fish, or skin made rough in imitation of it.

To SHAGREEN. v. a. [chagrin, Fr.] To irritate; to provoke. Both should be written chagrin.

To SHAIL. v. n. To walk sidewise. A low word.

Child, you must walk straight, and not botwim and shailing to every part you set. F. D. Drake.

To SHAKE. v. a. present shake; past, shook, shaken, or shook. [Dutch.]

1. To put into a vibrating motion; to move with quick returns backward and forward; to agitate.

When he was with his father,
Henry the third, the made all France to quake,
Shake he his weapon at us, and puts by. Shakespeare

I will shake mine hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their friends.

I shake my lap, and nod, to God shook out every man from 's house; even that he shook out and emptied. Kernebach.

The stars fell unto the earth, even as a meteor casteth her untimely fire when she is shaken by a mighty wind. Ruchman.

S H A

He shook the sacred honours of his head:
With terror trembled heav'n's tabernacle hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill. Dryden.

She first her husband on the poop espies,
Shaking his hand at distance on the main;
She took the sign, and shook her hand again. Dryden.

Machbeth is ripe for shaking, and the powers above
Put on their instruments. Shakespeare.
The tyrannous breathing of the north
Shakes all her tines from blowing. Shakespeare.

When ye depart, shake off the dust of your feet.
Matthew.

He looked at his book, and, holding out his right leg, put it into such a quivering motion, that thought he would have shook it off. Tatter.

4. To throw away; to drive off.

To shake all cares and business from our age, Conferring them on younger strengths, whilst we Unsubstantially crawl towards death. Shakespeare.

5. To weaken; to put in danger.

When his doctrines grew too strong to be shook by his enemies, they persecuted his reputation. Atterbury.

6. To drive from resolution; to depress;
to make afraid.

A fly and constant knife, not to be shook.
Shakespeare.

This respite shook
The bottom of my confidence. Shakespeare.

the day of Christ is at hand. 2 Thessalonians.

Not my firm faith
Can by his hand be shaken or shud'd. Milton.

7. To SHAKE hands. This phrase, from the action of clapping hands at meeting and parting, sometimes signifies to join with,
but commonly to take leave of.

With the slave
He never shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,
Till he would him from the mire to the crops. Shakespeare.

Nor can it be safe to a king to tarry among them whose shaking hands with the allegians, under pretence of laying faster hold of their religion. King Charles.

8. To SHAKE off. To rid himself of; to free from; to divert of.

me.

Autolus never yet was thief or pirate. Shakespeare.

If I could shake off but one seven years
From these old arms and legs,

I'd with that every foot. Shakespeare.

Say, forced hand! what could bestow
Courage on thee, to four to high?

Tell me, brave friend! what help'd thee so
To shake off all mortality? Waller.

If I received to be answered by himself, after I had shaken off the lesser and more barking creatures. Shakespeare.

Can I want courage for to have a deed
I've shook it off my conscience from hence. Dryden.

Here we are free from the narrow customs and respect we may shake off the heavy imposition. Collier.

How does thy beauty smooth
The face of war, and make even honour smile?
At sight of thee my heart shakes off its terrors. Addison.

To SHAKE. v. n.

By its own count as subtle; he is agitated by the motion of a pipe. Coreus.

2. To totter.

Under his burning wheels
The fiercest enemy to shake throughout,
All but the throne of God. Milton.

3. To tremble; to be unable to keep the body still.

S H A

Thy light, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts,
Constrains them weep, and shakes with fear and sorrow.

What said the wench, when he rose up again?
—Trembled and shook; for why, he stamp'd,
As if the vicar want to coven him. Shakespeare.
A shaking through their limbs they find,
Like leaves saluted by the wind. Waller.

4. To be in terror; to be deprived of firmness.

He, short of succours, and in deep despair,
Shook at the dismal prospect of the war. Dryden.

SHAKE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Concussion suffered.

If that thy fame with ev'ry toy be pos'd,
'Tis a thin web, which poisonous fancies make;
But the great soldier's honour was compos'd
Of thicker stuff which could endure a shake:
Witdon picks friends; civility plays the rest.
A toy, shunn'd cleanly, passeth with thee best.

Herbert.

2. Impulse; moving power.

The freholder is the basis of all other titles:
this is the substantial flock, without which they are no more than blossoms, that would fall away with every shake of wind. Addison.

3. Vibratory motion.

Several of his countrymen probably lived within the shake of the earthquake, and the shadow of the eclipse, which are recorded by this author. Addison.

4. Motion given and received.

Our salutations were very hearty on both sides, consisting of many kind shakes of the hand. Addison.

SHAKER. n. f. [from shake.] The person or thing that shakes.

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise,
He said; the shaker of the earth replies. Pope.

SHALE. n. f. [corrupted, I think, for shell.]
A husk; the case of seeds in siliqueous plants.

Behold you poor and starv'd band,
And your fair flesh shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.

Shakespeare.

SHALL. v. defective. [preal, Sax. is originally I owe, or I ought. In Chaucer, the faith I shall to God, means the faith I owe to God: thence it became a sign of the future tense. The French use devoir, dois, doit, in the same manner, with a kind of future signification; and the Swedes have skall, and the Islanders skal, in the same sense. It has no tenses but shall future, and should imperfect.

The explanation of shall, which foreigners and provincials confound with will, is not easy; and the difficulty is increased by the poets, who sometimes give to shall an emphatical sense of will:
but I shall endeavour, crasit Minerda, to show the meaning of shall in the future tense.]

1. I SHALL love. It will so be that I must love; I am resolv'd to love.

2. SHALL I love? Will it be permitted me to love? Will you permit me to love?
Will it be that I must love?

3. Thou SHALT love. I command thee to love; it is permitted thee to love; [in poetry or solemn diction] it will be that thou must love.

4. SHALT thou love? Will it be that thou must love? Will it be permitted to thee to love?

5. He SHALL love. It will be that he must love; it is commanded him that he love.

It is a mind, that shall remain.

—Shall remain!

Hear you this triton of the minims? Mark you his absolute shall? Shakespeare.

See Romulus the great:

This prince a prefect of your blood shall bear;
And, like his fire, in arms he shall appear.

Dryden.

That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation whereon all his despair is founded;
and the one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is to convince him that Christ's death, and the benefit his thereof, either do, or, if he perform the condition required of him, shall certainly belong to him. Hammond.

6. SHALL he love? Is it permitted him to love? [in solemn language] Will it be that he must love?

7. The plural persons follow the signification of the singulars.

SHALLOON. n. f. A light woollen stuff.

In blue shalloon shall Hamnibal be clad,
And Scipio trail an Irish purple plaid. Swift.

SHALLOP. n. f. [chaloupe, Fr.] A small boat.

You were resolv'd, after your arrival into Oroonoque, to pass to the mine; and, to that end, you desir'd to have Mr John Fearn's shallop: I do not allow of that course, because you cannot land so secretly but that some Indians on the river side may discover you, who giving knowledge of your passage to the Spaniards, you may be cut off before you can recover your boat. Raleigh.

—ur hero let

In a small shallop, fortune in his debt. Waller.

SHALLOW. adj. [This word is probably compounded of shoal and low.]

1. Not deep; having the bottom at no great distance from the surface or edge.

I had been drown'd, but that the shore was shelvy
and shallow; a death that I abhor. Shakespeare.

That inundation, though it were shallow, had a long continuance, whereby they of the vale, that were not drown'd, perished for want of food. Bacon.

The like opinion he held of Meotis Palus, that by the floods of Tanais, and earth brought down thereby, it grew observably *shallow*er in his days,
and would in process of time become a firm land.

Brown.

I am made a shallow forded stream,
Seen to the bottom: all my clearness scorn'd,
And all my faults expos'd. Dryden.

Shallow brooks, that flow'd so clear,
The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

In shallow furrows vines securely grow.

Dryden.

2. Not intellectually deep; not profound;
not very knowing or wise; empty;
trifling; futile; silly.

I'll shew my mind,

According to my shallow simple skull. Shakespeare.

This is a very shallow monster:

Ahead of him? A very shallow monster,
The man of the moon! A most poor credulous monster. Shakespeare.

The king was neither so shallow nor so ill advised as not to perceive the intention of the French king, for the invading himself of Britaigne.

Bacon.

Uncertain and unsettled he remains,
Deep vext in books, and shallow in himself.

Milton.

One would no more wonder to see the most shallow nation of Europe the most vain, than to find the most empty fellows in every nation more con-cited than the rest. Addison.

3. Not deep of sound.

If a virginal were made with a double concave, the one all the length of the virginal, and the other at the end of the strings, as the harp hath, it must make the sound perfecter, and not so shallow and jarr ng. Bacon.

SHALLOW. n. f. [from the adjective.] A

S H A

shelf; a sand; a flat; a shoal; a place where the water is not deep.

I should not see the sandy hour glass run,
But I should think of shallows end of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Veiling her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Shakespeare.

A swift stream is not heard in the channel, but upon shallows of gravel. Bacon.

Having but newly left those grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction, and now on the sudden transported, to be led with their unballasted wits in fathomless and re-quiet deeps of controversy, they do grow into hatred of learning. Milton.

You that so oft have founded

And fathom'd all his thoughts, that know the deeps

And shallows of his heart, should need no instructions. Dehane.

To advance your ends. Dryden.

He sounds and fathoms him, to find
The shallows of his soul.

The wary Dutch

Behind their treach'rous shallows now withdraw,
And there lay snare to catch the British host. Dry.

Three more fierce Enrus in his angry mood
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving land,

And in mid ocean left them moor'd a-land. Dryd.
In arms of the sea, and among islands, there is no great depth, and some places are plain shallows.

Burnet.

Their spawn being lighter than the water, there it would not sink to the bottom, but be buoyed up by it, and carried away to the shallows. Ry.

With the use of diligence, and prudent conduct,
he may decline both rocks and shallows. Norris.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world, and must we now have an ocean of more flats and shallows, in the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

SHALLOWBRAINED. adj. [shallow and brain.] Foolish; futile; trifling; empty.

It cannot but be matter of just indignation to all good men, to see a company of lewd shallow brained huiss making atheism, and contempt of religion, the idle badge of wit. Swift.

SHALLOWLY. adv. [from shallow.]

1. With no great depth.

The land hath open on the grass, or but shallowly covered. Carr.

2. Simply; foolishly.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence.
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.

Shakespeare.

SHALLOWNESS. n. f. [from shallow.]

1. Want of depth.

2. Want of thought; want of understanding; futility; illiness; emptiness.

By it do all things have their measur'd hour,
We cannot ask the thing which is not there.

Blaming the *shallow*ness of our respect. Hickat.

I cannot wonder enough at the *shallow*ness and impertinent zeal of the vulgar but in Dinocrates were carried away with such an ignorant devotion for his success, when it little concerned their honor or security. Pope.

SHALM. n. f. [German.] A kind of musical pipe.

Every captain was commanded to have his dies in readiness to set forward upon the 22<sup>d</sup> of which was by the found of a shalm or horn. Arto.

SHALT. Second person of shall.

To SHAM. v. n. [thommi, Welsh, to cheat.]

1. To trick; to cheat; to fool with a fraud; to delude with false pretences.
A low word.

Men tender in point of honour, and yet with little regard to truth, are sooner wrought upon by flattery than by conscience, when they thus selves fooled and shammed into a conviction.

Le Sage.

Then all your wits that fear and shame,
Down from Don Quixote to Tom Tram,
From whom I jests and puns purloin,
And dily put them off for mine,
Fond to be thought a country wit.

1. To obtrude by fraud or folly.

We must have a care that we do not, for want of laying things and things together, shame fallacies upon the world for current reason. L'Estrange.

SHAM. n. f. [from the verb.] Fraud; trick; delusion; false pretence; imposture. A low word.

No sham to grofs but it will pass upon a weak man, that is pragmatistical and inquisitive.

It goes a great way when natural curiosity and eager prejudice shall be assisted with the shams of allegory and judgments. L'Estrange.

He that has brought the sham, wheedle, or humour in use, put together, as he thought fit, those as he made it stand for. Locke.

That in the sacred temple needs would try
Without a fire, th' unheated guns to try,
Believe who will the foolish sham, not I. Addison.

SHAM. adj. False; counterfeit; fictitious; pretended.

Never join the fray.

Where the sham quarrel interrupts the way. Gay.
SHAMBLE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology; scannaglia, Italian.]

1. The place where butchers kill or sell their meat; a butchery.

Far be the thoughts of this from Henry's heart,
To make a shambles of the parliament-house.

Shakespeare.

I hope my noble lord esteems me honest.
—Oh, ay, as summer flies are in the shambles,
That quicken even with blowing. Shakespeare

We warned a flock of sheep, that were driving to me shambles, of their danger; and, upon uttering their sounds, they all fled. Arbutnot.

2. It is here improperly used.

When the person is made the jest of the mob, or his lack the shambles of the executioner, there is no conviction in the one than in the other.

Watts.

SHAMBLING. adj. [See SCAMBLING.]

Moving awkwardly and irregularly. A low bad word.

By that shambling in his walk, it should be my rich banker, Gomez, whom I knew at Barcelona. Dryden.

So when nurse Nokes to set young Ammon tries,
With shambling legs, long chin, and foolish eyes,
With dangling hands he strokes the imperial robe,
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe.

Smith.

SHAME. n. f. [Jrean, Sax. schacnte,
Dutch.]

1. The passion felt when reputation is supposed to be lost; the passion expressed sometimes by blushes.

Lamenting sorrow did in darkness lie,
And shame his ugly face did hide from living eye.

Spenser.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.
—Vice neither charity nor shame to me:

I deal not with me have you deat,
And then fully my hopes by you are butcher'd;
My charity is outrage, life my shame;
And in my shame tall lives my sorrow's rage.

Shakespeare.

Hide, for shame,
Romans, your gaudy images.

That blith at their degenerate progeny. Dryden.

In the schools men are allowed, without shame, to deny the agreement of ideas; or out of the schools, from thence have learned, without shame, to deny the connection of ideas. Locke.

2. The cause or reason of shame; disgrace;
ignominy.

The shame for him that he sends it me;
For I have heard him say, a thousand times,
His Julia gave it him at his departure.

Shakespeare.

God deliver the world from such guides, who are the shame of religion. South.

This jest was first of th' other house's making.

New reap'd; the other part sheepwalks and folds.
Milton.

SHEER, adj. [rēyn, Saxon.] Pure; clear; unmingled.

In the day, I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale, score me up for the lying it roguish in chitrendom. Shakespeare.

Sheer argument is not the talent of the man;
little wrestled sentences are the bladders which bear him up, and he sinks downright, when he once pretends to swim without them. Atterbury.

SHEER, adv. [from the adjective.] Clean; quick; at once. Not now in use, except in low language.

Thrown by angry Jove
Sheer o'er the crystal battlements; from morn
To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
A summer's day, and with the setting sun
Droop'd from the zenith, like a falling star,
On Lemnos. Milton.

The sword of Satan, with steep force to smite
Defending, and in half cut sheer. Milton.

Due entrance he disdain'd, and in contempt
At one slight bound high overleap'd all bound Of hill or high wall, and sheer within Lights on his feet. Milton.

Receives her lord. Dryden.

3. [coutes, French; echoten, Dutch.] In a ship are ropes bent to the clews of the sails, which serve in all the lower sails to haul on round off the clew of the sail;
but in topsails they draw the sail close to the yard-arms. Dict.—Dryden seems to understand it otherwise.

The little word behind the back, and undoing wafter, like pulling off a sheet-ropes at sea, flutters the sail. Sarcling.

These Boreas drove against his flying sails,
And rent the sheets. Dryden.

4. As much paper as is made in one body.

As much love in rhyme
As could be cram'd up in a sheet of paper,
Writ on both sides the leaf, margin and all. Shutlip.

When I first put pen to paper, I thought all I should have to say would have been contained in one sheet of paper. Locke.

A beggarly account of empty boxes. Shakespeare.

Bind fast, or from their shelves
Your books will come and fight themselves. Sneyt.

2. A sand bank in the sea; a rock under shallow water.

Our transported souls shall congratulate each other their having now fully escap'd the numerous rocks, shelves, and quicksands. Boyle.

Near the shelves of Cerce's shores they run,
A dangerous coast. Dryden.

He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of self
Soon light him on the tower's shelf;
He put it out again. Dryden.

3. The plural is analogically shelves; Dryden has shelves, probably by negligence.

He fear'd the helms, his fellows cheer'd,
Turn'd short upon the shelves, and madly steer'd. Dryden.

SHELLEY, adj. [from shelf.]

1. Full of hidden rocks or banks; full of dangerous shallows.

Long infamous for ships and sailors' loss,
And white with bones. Dryden.

2. I know not well the meaning in this passage; perhaps rocky.

The tillable fields are in some places so tough, that the plough will scarcely cut them; and in some to shelley, that the corn hath much ado to loosen its roots. Carew.

SHELL, n. f. [rēyll, rēall, Sax. fēhale, fēhelle, Dutch.]

1. The hard covering of any thing; the external crust.

The sun is as the fire, and the exterior earth is as the shell of the colipile, and the abyss as the water within it, now when the heat of the sun had pierced through the shell and reached the waters, it rarefied them. Boernet.

Whatever we fetch from under ground is only what is lodged in the shell of the earth. Locke.

2. The covering of a testaceous or crustaceous animal.

Her women wear
The spoils of nations in an ear;
Chang'd for the treasure of a shell,
And in their loose attires do swell. Ben Jonson.

Was to Neptune recommended;
Peace and plenty spread the sails;
Venus, in her shell before him,
From the sands in safety bore him. Dryden.

S H E

The shells served as moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated, and afterwards freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

He whom ungrateful Athens could expel,
At all times put but when he sign'd the Pope. Pope.

of a house, that would have been a very noble building, had he brought it to perfection. Addison.

7. It is used for a musical instrument in poetry, from tyllada, Latin; the first lyre being said to have been made by framing strings over the shell of a tortoise.

Let's then a god they thought there could not dwell
Within the hollow of that shell, Dryden.

8. The superficial part.

So do you see the Romanists about this outward shell of religion, that if an altar be moved or a stone of it broken, it ought to be reconsecrated. Angliffe.

TO SHELL, v. a. [from the noun.] To take out of the shell; to strip of the shell.

TO SHELL, v. n.

lay upon then shores, that they never questioned
but that they were the exuvie of shellfish, and once belonged to the sea. Woodward.

SHELLY, adj. [from shell.]

1. Abounding with shells.

The ocean rolling, and the shelly shore,
Beautifully bright, shalld light no more. Prior.

2. Consisting of shells.

The conceit of Anaximander was, that the first men, and all animals, were bred in some warm monture, much like a testaceous skins, as lobsters;
and so continued, till their shelly prisons growing dry, and too damp, made way for them. Boyle.

SHEETER, n. f. [Of this word the etymology is unknown: Skinner deduces it from shell; Davies from rēyb, a shield,
Saxon.]

1. A cover from any external injury or violence.

We hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm. Shakespeare.

They with the mountains now might be again
Thrown on them, as a shelter from his ire. Milton.

Heroes of old, when wounded, shelter sought;
But he, who meets all dangers with disdain,
Even in their face his ship to anchor brought,
And keeps his ship proud upon the main. Dryden.

They may learn experience, and avoid a cave as the worst shelter from rain, when they have a lover in company. Dryden.

3. The healing plant shall aid;
From forms a shelter, and from heat a shade. Pope.
A protector; a defender; one that gives security.

There has been a shelter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy. Phaen.

3. The state of being covered; protection;
security.

Low at his foot a spacious plain is plac'd,
Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd,
Which shade and shelter from the hill derives,
While the kind river wealth and beauty gives. Denham.

Who into shelter takes their tender bloom,
And forms their minds to fly from ills to come. Young

To SHELTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover from external violence.

With hearts more proof than shields. Shakespeare

His pond'rous shield,
Ethereal temper, massy, large, and round,
Behind him cast; the broad circumference Hung on his shoulders like the moon. Milton

2. Defence; protection.

3. One that gives protection or security.

The terror of the Trojan field,
The Grecian honour, ornament, and shield,
High on the pile th' unconquer'd chest is plac'd. Dryden

To SHIELD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a shield.

2. To defend; to protect; to secure.

We're 't my fitness
To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dissolve and tear
Thy flesh and bones: how'er a woman's shape
Doth shield thee. Shakespeare

Shouts of applause ran ringing through the field,
To see the son the vanquish'd father shield. Dryden

3. To keep off; to defend against.

Out of their cold caves and frozen habitations into the sweet soil of Europe, they brought with them their usual weeds, fit to shield the cold which they had been inured. Spenser

My lord I must entreat the time alone,
—God shield I should disturb devotion. Shakespeare

To SHIFT. v. n. [Of this word the original is obscure: skipta, Runick, is to change.]

1. To change place.

Vexat'ls being fix'd to the same place, and not able to shift and seek out after proper matter for their merriment, it was necessary that it should be brought to them. Bacon

2. To change; to give place to other things.

If the ideas of our minds constantly change and shift, in a continual succession, it would be impossible for a man to think long of any one thing. Locke linen.

She begs you just would turn you while she shens
linen. Locke

4. To find some expedient; to act or live though with difficulty.

We cannot shift: being in, we must go on.
Men in distress will look to themselves, and leave their companions to shift as well as they can. Locke

Since we desire no recompence nor thanks, we ought to be dismissed, and have leave to shift for ourselves. Swift.

5. To practise indirect methods.

All those schoolmen, though they were exceeding witty, yet better teach all their followers to shift than to resolve by their disquisitions. Raleigh.

6. To take some method for safety.

Nature instructs every creature how to shift for itself in cases of danger. L'Estrange.

To SHIFT, v. a.

1. To change; to alter.

It was not levity, but absolute necessity, that made the fish shift their condition. L'Estrange.

Come, still me, muse obedient;

Let us try some new expedient,
Shift the scene for half an hour,
Time and place are in thy power. Swift.

Or let or go, shift it that knowest the ways. Tupper.

3. To put by some expedient out of the way.

I shifted him away,
And laid good excuses on your civility. Shakespeare.
The wisdom of all these latter times, in prizes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, when they are near, than solid and grounded courtesies to keep them aloof. Bacon.

4. To change in position.

Neither use they sails, nor place their oars in order upon the sides; but carrying the war loofly, shift it hither and thither at pleasure. Raleigh.

Where the wind
Veers off, as oft she steers and shifts her sail. Milton.

We strive in vain against the seas and wind,
Now shift your sails. Dryden.

5. To change, as clothes.

I would advise you to shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice. Shakespeare.

6. To dress in fresh clothes.

As it were to ride day and night, and not to have patience to shift me. Shakespeare.

7. To SHIFT off. To defer; to put away by some expedient.

The most beautiful parts must be the most faded, the colours and words most chosen, many things in both, which are not deserving of this case, must be shifted off, content with vulgar expressions. Dunder.

Struggle and contend as you will, and lay your taxes as you please, the traders will shift it off from their own gain. Locke.

By various dissolutions of the devil they are prevailed on to shift off the duties, and neglect the conditions, on which salvation is promised. Rogers.

SHIFT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Expedient found or used with difficulty; difficult means.

She redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to no other shift than to wait and go back; at that time seeming the image of innocency against violence. Sidney.

SHIFTERESS, adj. [from shift.] Wanting expedients; wanting means to act or live.

For the poor shiftless irrationals, it is a prodigious act of the great Creator's indulgence, that they are all ready furnished with such clothing. Dehman.

SHILLING, n. f. [scylling, Sax. and Erse; schilling, Dutch.] A coin of various value in different times. It is now twelve pence.

Five of these pence made then shilling, which they called schilling, probably from schilling, which the Romans used for the fourth part of an ounce, and forty-eight of these schillings made their pound, and four hundred of these pounds were a legacy for a king's daughter, as appraised by the last will of king Alfred. Camden.

The very same shilling may at one time pay twenty men in twenty days, and at another rest in the same hands one hundred days. Locke.

Who, with much pains exerting all his sense,
Can range a right his shillings, pounds, and pence. Young.

SHILL-I-SHALL-I. A corrupt reduplication of shall I? The question of a man hesitating. To stand shill-I-shall-I, is to continue hesitating and procrastinating.

I am somewhat dainty in making a resolution, because when I make it, I keep it. I don't stand shill-I-shall-I then if I say 't, I'll do 't. Congreve.

SHILLY, adv. [from shy.] Not familiarly; not frankly.

SHIN, n. f. [scina, Sax. schien, German.] The forepart of the leg.

I brushed my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger. Shakespeare.

The shin bone, from the knee to the instep, is made by shadowing one half of the leg with a single shadow. Peacham.

His leg, then broke,
Had got a deputy of oak;
For when a shin in fight is cropt,
The knee with one of timber's prop'd. Hudibras.

As when to an house we come,
To know if any one's at home,
We knock; so one must kick your shin,
Ere he can find your soul's within. Anonymous.

So proud the shined in her princely suite,
Looking to heaven, for earth she did disdain,
And sitting high. Fairy Queen.

5. To be beautiful.

Of all th' enamell'd race, whose silvery wing
Waves to the tepid zephyrus of the spring,
Or swims along the fluid atmosphere,
Once brighten'd shin'd this child of heat and air. Pope.

6. To be eminent or conspicuous.

If there come truth from them,
As upon thee, Methinks, their spears shine,
Why, by the virtues on their side good,
May they not be my oracles as well? Shakespeare.

Her face was veil'd; yet to my fix'd light
Love, sweetest, godlike, in her person shin'd.
So clear, as in no face with more delight. Milton.

Cato's fond
Shook out in every thing she acts or speaks;
While winning modesty and attentive smiles
Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace
Softens the rigour of her father's virtues. Addison.

dangers from without, to be torn by many violent factions within, then to be torn and lacerated, and the most likely symptoms, in a state, of sickness to death. Swift.

SHORT. adv. [It is, I think, only used in composition.] Not long.

Beauty and youth,

And slightly hope, and short ending joy.

One strange draught prescribed by Hippocrates for a short-breathed man, is half a gallon of hyacinth, with a little vinegar. Boerhaave.

To SHORTEN. v. a. [from short.]

1. To make short, either in time or space.
Because they see it is not fit or possible that churches should frame thanksgivings intercalable to each petition, they shorten somewhat the runs of their eulogy. Hosker.

Would you have been so brief with him, he would have been so brief with you in shortening you.
For taking to the head, the whole head's length.

To shorten its ways to knowledge, and make each perception more comprehensive, it binds them into bundles. Locke.

None shall dare

With shorten'd sword to stab in closer war,
But in fair combat. Dryden.

War, and luxury's more direful rage,
Thy crimes have brought, to shorten mortal breath,
With all the numerous family of death. Dryden.

Whatever shortens the fibres, by igniting themselves into their parts, as water in a rope, contracts. Arbutnot.

2. To contract; to abbreviate.

We shorten'd days to moments by love's art,
Whitt' out two souls
Perceiv'd no passing time, as if a part
Our love had been of tid' eternity. Suckling.

3. To continue; to hinder from progression.

The Irish dwell altogether by their tepts, so as they may compare what they will; whereas if there were English placed among them, they should not be able to stir but that it should be known, and they shorten'd according to their demerits. Spang.

To be known, shortens my land indent,
My boon I make it, that you know me not.

Here, where the subject is so fruitful, I am shorten'd by my chain, and can only see what is forbidden me to reach. Dryden.

4. To lop.

Dismant with lop arms the youth appears,
Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears.

SHORTHAND. n. f. [short and hand.] A method of writing in compendious characters.

Your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tri'd, and cannot score them on the stage;
Unless each vice in shorthand they indite,
Even as noteth 'prentices whole sermons write. Dryden.

Boys have but little use of shorthand, and should by no means practice it, till they can write perfectly well.
In shorthand shall'd, where little marks comprise Whole words, a sentence in a letter lies. Creech.

As the language of the face is universal, so 'tis very comprehensive: no lacomin can reach it: 'tis the shorthand of the mind, and crowds a great deal in a little room. Collier.

SHORTLIVED. adj. [short and live.] Not living or lasting long.

Unhappy parent of a shortlived son!

Why loads he this embitter'd life with shame?

The joyful shortlived news soon spread around,
Took the same turn. Dryden.

Some vices promise a great deal of pleading in the commission; but then, at best, it is but short-lived and transient, a sudden flash, presently extinguished. Calamy.

The frequent alterations in publick proceedings,
the variety of shortlived favourites that prevailed in their several turns under the government of her successors, have broken us into these unhappy distinctions. Addison.

A piercing torment that shortlived pleasure of yours must bring upon me, from whom you never received offence. Addison.

All those graces
The common fate of mortal charms may find;
Content our shortlived prates to engage,
The joy and wonder of a single age. Addison.

Admiration is a shortlived passion, that immediately decays upon growing familiar with its object, unless it be toll'd fed with fresh discoveries. Addison.

Then palaces shall rise; the joyful ton
Shall hush what his shortlived fire begun. Pope.

SHORTLY. adv. [from short.]

1. Quickly; soon; in a little time. It is commonly used relatively of future time, but Clarendon seems to use it absolutely.

I must leave thee, love, and shortly to.
Thou art no friend to God, or to the king.

Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.

The armies came shortly in view of each other.

The time will shortly come, wherein you shall more rejoice for that little you have expended for the benefit of others, than in that which by so long toll you shall have saved. Calamy.

He celebrates the anniversary of his father's funeral, and shortly after arrives at Cumæ. Dryden.

Ev'n he, whose soul now melts in mournful lays Shall shortly wait the generous tear he pays. Pope.

2. In a few words; briefly.

I could express them more shortly this way than in prose, and much of the force as well as grace of argument depends on their conciseness. Pope.

SHORTNESS. n. f. [from short.]

1. The quality of being short, either in time or space.

I'll make a journey twice as far, I enjoy
A second night of such sweet shortness, wh. h. Shakespeare.

They move strongest in a night here, which is caused by the shortness of the distance. Bacon.

I will not trouble my readers with the shortness of the time in which I writ it. Dryden.

May they not justly to our clothes upbraid
Shortness of night, and penury of shade? Pope.

Think upon the vanity and shortness of human life, and let death and eternity be often in your minds. Locke.

2. Fewness of words; brevity; conciseness.

The necessity of shortness cautions men to cut unpertinent discourses, and to comprise much matter in few words. Hosker.

Sir, pardon me in what I have to say,
Your plainness and your shortness please me well.

The prayers of the church will be very fit, as being most easy for their memories, by reason of their shortness, and yet containing a great deal of matter. Duty of Man.

3. Want of reach; want of capacity.

Whatever is above these, preceedeth shortness of memory, or of want of a stayed attention. Bacon.

4. Deficiency; imperfection.

Another account of the shortness of our reason, and cabinets of deception, is the forwardness of an understanding's assent to slightly examined conclusions. Glaucide.

From the instances I had given of human ignorance, to our shortness in most things else, it is an easy inference. Glaucide.

It may easily be conceived, by any that can follow the languages and shortness of translation out of languages and manners of writing differ from ours. Tracy.

SHORTNESS. n. f. [short and rib.] The barbaric ribs; the ribs below the thorax.

A gentleman was wounded in a duel, the rib entered into his right side, slanting by his shortness under the muscles. Wagner.

SHORTSIGHTED. adj. [short and sight.]

1. Unable by the convexity of the eye to see far.

Shortsighted men for remote objects best in age; therefore they are accounted to have the most lasting eyes. Locke.

2. Unable by intellectual sight to see far.

The foolish and shortsighted deal with fear
That they go nowhere, or they know not where.

Other propositions were designed for more the shortsighted and credulous. Locke.

His fear foretold foul weather. Dryden.

SHORE. adj. [from shore.] Lying near the coast.

There is commonly a declivity from the shore to the middle part of the channel, and those shory parts are generally but some fathoms deep. Burnet.
SHOT. The pret. and part. pass. of shoot.

On the other side a pleasant grove
Was shot up high, full of the stately tree
That dedicated is to Olympick Jove. Fairy Queen.
Their tongue is as an arrow shot out, it speaketh deceit. Jeremiah.

The fortifier of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodiousness afforded by the ground, and that rather at a safe preserving the harbour from sudden attempts of little fleets, than to withstand any great navy. Cicero.

He only thought to crop the flower,
New shot up from a vernal flower. Milton.

From before her vanishing night,
Shot through with orient beams. Milton.
Sometimes they shot out in length, like rivers, and sometimes they flew into remote countries in columns. Burnet.

And show my duty by my timely care. Dryden.

7. To publish; to make public; to proclaim.

You are a chosen generation, that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness. 1 Peter.

8. To inform; to teach; with off.

I shall no more speak in proverbs, but show you plainly of the Father. John.

9. To make known.

I rail'd thee up to show in thee my power. Isaiah.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and color serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee. Morgan.

10. To conduct. To show, in this sense, is to show the way.

She taking him for some cautious city patriot, that came for privacy, shows him into the dining room. Suift.

11. To offer; to afford.

To him that is afflicted, pity should be show'd
from his friend. Job.

Felix willing to show the Jews a pleasure, in Paul bound. Acts.

Thou shalt utterly destroy them; make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them. Deuteronomy.

12. To explain; to expound.

Forasmuch as knowledge and showing of hard sentences, and dissolving of doubts, were found in the time, Daniel let him be called. Daniel.

13. To discover; to point out.

Why stand we longer showing under tears,
That show no end but death? Morgan.

To SHOW, v. n.

1. To appear; to look; to be in appearance.

She shows a body rather than a life,
A flame than a brother. Shakespeare.

Just such she shows before a rising storm. Dryden.

Still on we press; and here renew the canvas.
So great, that in the stream the moon shows a purple. Phaen.

2. To have appearance; to become well of all.

My lord of York, it better show'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your expedition on the holy text,
Than now to see you here, an iron man,
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum. Shakespeare.

SHOW, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A spectacle; something publicly exposed to view for money.

I do not know what the may produce me, but provided it be a show, I shall be very well satisfied. Addison.

The dwarf kept the gates of the show room. Arbutnot.

2. Superficial appearance; not reality.

Mild heav'n
Disapproves that care, though wise in show,
That with superfluous burden loads the day. Morgan.

3. Ostentatious display.

Nor doth his grandeur, and majestic show
Of luxury, though call'd magnificence, Allure mine eye. Morgan.

Stand before her in a golden dream;

Set all the pleasures of the world to show,
And as vainly as for her love, she shows
The radiant sun.

From above ten thousand blessings down,
For he is set so high for show signs. Chaucer.
Never was a charge maintained with such a show of gravity, which had a lighter foundation. Afterd.
I envy none their pageantry and show,
I only note the gilding of their woe. Young.

Object attracting notice.
The city itself makes the noblest show of any in the world; the houses are most of them painted on the outside, so that they look extremely gay and lively. Afterd.

Public appearance: contrary to concealment.
I saw him from his grave,
Spout'd punctuations and pow'rs, triumph'd
In open show, and with ascension bright Captivity led captive. Milton.

Semblance; likeness.
When devils will their blackest sins put on,
They do suggest at first with heavenly shows. Shakespeare.

He through pass'd the middle unmark'd,
In show plebeian angel militant. Milton.

Speciousness; plausibility.
The players of Isechiel have some show in them;
For there the Lord commandeth the Levites, which had committed idolatry, to be put from their dignities, and serve in inferior ministries. Whitgift.
The kindred of the slain forgive the deed;
But a short exile must for show precede. Dryden.

External appearance.
B. I lay O Schuane? Alas, your words be against it. Shall I say prince Pyrocles? Wretch that I am, your show is manifest against it. Sidney.
Ere was the fight on the proud Belgianside,
For honour, which they seldom sought before;
But now they by their own vain boasts were tied,
And forc'd, at least in show, to prize it more. Dryden.

Exhibition to view.
I have a letter from her;
The which wherof's so larded with my matter,
That neither singly can be manifested,
Without the show of both. Shakespeare.

a. Pomp; magnificent spectacle.
As for triumphs, masks, feasts, and such shows,
We need not be put in mind of them. Bacon.

1. Phantom; not reality.
What you saw was all a airy show;
And all those airy shapes you now behold
Were human bodies once. Dryden.

2. Representative action.
Hono was so overwhelmed with happiness, that he could not make a reply; but expressed in dumb show those sentiments of gratitude that were too big for utterance. Afterd.

SHOEBREAD or SHEWBREAD. n. s. [show and bread.] Among the Jews, they thus called loaves of bread that the priest of the week put every Sabbath day upon the golden table, which was in the sanctuary before the Lord. They were covered with leaves of gold, and were twelve in number, representing the twelve tribes of Israel. They served them up hot, and at the same time took away the stale ones, which could not be eaten but by the priest alone. This offering was accompanied with frankincense and salt.
Calmel.

Set upon the table shewbread before me. Exodus.
SHOWER. n. s. [scheure, Dutch.]
1. Rain either moderate or violent.
Is the day here not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
And then will do well too such a shift. Shakespeare.
The ancient cinnamon was, while it grew, the soft, and in showers it possessed words. Bacon.
2. Storm of any thing falling thick,
Vol. II.

All for then in a shower of gold, and hail Rich pearls upon thee. Shakespeare.

Give me a storm; if it be love,
Like Daniel in the golden shower,
I swim in pleasure. Carro.

With showers of flowers he drives them far away;
The feather'd dogs around at distance bay. Pope.

3. Any very liberal distribution.
He and myself
Have travell'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it. Shakespeare.

To SHOWER, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet or drown with rain.
Serve they as a flow'ry verge, to bind
The fluid fairs of that same wat'ry cloud,
Left it again dissolve, and show'r the earth. Milton.

The sun more glad imprints his beams,
Than in fair evening cloud, or humid bow,
When God hath show'r'd the earth. Milton.

2. To pour down.
There, lull'd by nightingales, embracing sleep;
And on their naked limbs the flow'ry root
Shower'd roses, which the moon repair'd. Milton.

3. To distribute or scatter with great liberality.
After this fair discharge, all civil honours having shower'd on him before, there now fell out occasion to action. Wotton.

Caesar's favour,
That show'r'd down greatness on his friends, will rate me

To Rome's first honours. Afterd.

To SHOWER, v. n. To be rainy.

SHOWERY. adj. [from shower.] Rainy.
A hilly field, where the stubble is standing, set on fire in the show'ry season, will put forth multitudes. Bacon.

Murrinus came from Auxur's show'ry height,
With ragged rocks and stony quarries white,
Seated on hills. Afterd.

The combat thickens, like the storm that flies
From westward, when the show'ry winds arise. Afterd.

SHOWERY. adj. [from show.]

1. Splendid; gaudy.
The escutcheons of the company are show'ry, and will look magnificent. Dwy.

2. Ostentatious.

SHOWN. [pret. and part. pass. of To show.]

Exhibited.
Mercy shown on man by him lov'd. Milton.

SHOWNY. adj. [from show.] Ostentatious.
Men of warm imaginations neglect solid and substantial happiness for what is showy and superficial. Afterd.

SHRANK. The preterit of shrink.

The children of Israel cut out of the sinew which shrank upon the hollow of the thigh. Genesis.

To SHRED, v. a. pret. shred. [prepuan, Saxon.] To cut into small pieces. Commonly used of cloth or herbs.

It hath a number of short cuts or shreds,
which may be better called wisens than prayers. Hooker.

One gathered wild gourds, and shred them.

Where did you whet your knife to-night, he cries,
And shred the leeks that in your house rise? Dryden.

SHRED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A small piece cut off.

Gold, grown somewhat churlish by recovering, is made more pliant by throwing in shreds of tanned leather. Bacon.

The mighty Tyrian queen, that gain'd
With subtle shreds a tract of land,
Did leave it with a cattle fair
To his great ancestor.

A beggar might patch up a garment with such shreds as the world throws away. Pope.

2. A fragment.

They said they were an hungry; sigh'd forth proverbs.

Timon broke these walls; that dogs must eat:
And with these shreds they mended their compaignings. Shakespeare.

Shreds of wit and senseless rhimes
Blunder'd out a thousand times. Swift.

His panegyric is made up of half a dozen shreds,
like a school-boy's theme, beaten general topics. Swift.

STIREW. n. s. [Schreyen, German, to clamour.] A peevish, malignant, clamorous, spiteful, vexatious, turbulent woman.
It appears in Robert of Gloucester, that this word signified anciently any one, perverse or obstinate of either sex.
There dede of hem vor hanger a thousand and mo,
And yet holde the gervace to none pego. Robert of Gloucester.

Be merry, be merry, my wife has all;
For women are stirews both stout and tall. Shakespeare.

By this reckoning he is more stirew than she. Shakespeare.
A man had got a stirew to his wife, and there could be no quiet in the house for her. L'Estrange.
Her fallow checks her envious mood did show,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the stirew. Dryden.
Every one of them, who is a stirew in domestic life, is now become a scold in politics. Afterd.

SUREW. adj. [contracted from shrewed.]

1. Having the qualities of a shrew; malicious; troublesome; mischievous.

Per child's filter is to cast and shrewd,
That till the father ends his hands of her,
Your love must live a maid. Shakespeare.

2. Malignantly, cunning; more artful than good.

It was a shrewd saying of the old monk, that two kind of prisons would serve for all offenders, as inquisition and a bedlam; if any man should deny the being of a God, and the immortality of the soul, such a one should be put into the first, as being a desperate heretic; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet allow himself in any known wickedness, such a one should be put into bedlam. Tillemont.

A spiteful saying gratifies many little passions, that it meets with a good reception; and the man who utters it is looked upon as a shrewd satirist. Afterd.

Corruption proceeds from employing those who have the character of shrewd worldly men, instead of such as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue. Afterd.

3. Bad; ill-betokening.

Scarce any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself; and consequently we may take it for a shrewd indication and sign, whereby to judge of those who have sinned with too much caution, to suffer the world to charge sins directly upon their conversation. South.

4. Painful; pinching; dangerous; mischievous.

Every of this number,
That have endur'd shrewd nights and days with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune. Shelf.

When a man thinks he has a servant, he finds a traitor that cuts his bread, and is readier to do him a mischief, and a shrewd tarr, than an open adversary. South.

No enemy is so despicable but he may do a body
a shrewd turn. L'Estrange.

SHREWDLY. adv. [from shrewd.]

1. Mischievously; destructively.

This practice hath most shrewdly put upon thee. Shakespeare.

At Oxford, his youth, and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat been shrewdly touch'd, even before the sluices of popular liberty were let open. Wotton.

2. Vexatiously. It is used commonly of slight mischief, or in general expression.

The oblique and satirical are like to shock themselves shrewdly hurt, too soon, by being set off from that body which they choose not to be of.

The fisher's robe is upon the shore;
You would not to which the shrewdly paid.
Dryden.

3. With good guests.

Four per cent. increases not the number of lenders; as any man at first hearing will shrewdly suspect it.
Locke.

SHREW'DNESS, n. f. [from shrewd.]

1. Sly cunning; archness.

Her garboles, which not wanted shrewdness of policy too, did you too much disquiet. Shakespeare.
The neighbours round admire his shrewdness.
For songs of loyalty and lewdness. Swift.

2. Mischievousness; petulance.

SHREW'WISH, adj. [from shrew.] Having the qualities of a shrew; froward; petulantly clamorous.

Angelo, you must excuse us;
My wife is shrewish, when I keep not hours.
Shakespeare.

SHREW'WISHL, adv. [from shrewish.] Petulant; peevishly; clamorously; frow-wardly.

He speaks every shrewdly; one would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him. Shakespeare.

SHREW'WISNESS, n. f. [from shrewish.]
The qualities of a shrew; frowardness;
petulance; clamorousness.

I have no gift in shrewdness;
I am a right maid for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me. Shakespeare.

SHREW'WMOUSE, n. f. [repeapa, Saxon.]

A mouse of which the bite is generally supposed venomous, and to which vulgar tradition assigns such malignity, that the is said to lame the foot over which she runs. I am informed that all these reports are calumnious, and that her feet and teeth are equally harmless with those of any other little mouse. Our ancestors however looked on her with such terror, that they are supposed to have given her name to a scolding woman, whom for her venom they call a shrew.

TO SHRIEK, v. n. [skrieger, Danish; seric-ciolare, Italian.] To cry out inarticulately with anguish or horror; to scream.

On top whereof my dwell the ghastly owl,
Shrieking his baleful note. Fairy Queen.

It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman
Which gives the sternest good night. Shakespeare.

Were I the ghost that walk'd,
I'd shriek, that even your ears should rattle to hear me.
Shakespeare.

In a dreadful dream
I saw my lord so near destruction,
Then shriek'd myself awake. Denham.

Hark! peace!
At this the shriek'd aloud; the mournful train Echo'd her grief. Dryden.
Why did you shriek out? Dryden.

SHRIEK, n. f. [skrieg, Danish; sericcio, Italian.] An articulate cry of anguish or horror.

Una hearing evermore
His cruel shrieks and growings, often tore
Her guiltless garments, and her golden hair,
For pity of his pain. Fairy Queen.

Time has been, my senses would have cool'd,
To hear a night shriek, and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal traitorous rouse and fire
As life were in't. Shakespeare.

The corps of Almon and the rest are shown;
Shrieks, clamours, murmurs, till the fringed town.
Dryden.

SHRIFF, n. f. [repiet, Saxon.] Confession made to a priest. Out of use.

Off with Bernardine's head: I'll give a present Arise,
And will advise him for a better place. Shakespeare.

My first shall never rest;
I'll watch him (name, and talk him off;
His bed shall fear a throb, his board a shrink.
Shakespeare.

The duke's commands were absolute;
Therefore, my lord, address you to your shrift.
And be yourself; for you must die this instant.
Rowe.

SHRIGHT, for shricked. Spenser.

SHRILL, adj. [A word supposed to be made per onomatopæia, in imitation of the thing expressed, which indeed it images very happily.] Sounding with a piercing, tremulous, or vibratory sound.

Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And letch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.
Shakespeare.

The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn,
Doth with his hoarse and shrill sounding throat
Awake the god of day. Shakespeare.

Look up a bright, the shrill gorg'd back to far Cannot be heard. Shakespeare.
Up spring the lark, shrill voice'd and loud.
Thomson.

TO SHRILL, v. n. [from the adjective.]

To pierce the ear with sharp and quick vibrations of sound.
The tan of all the world is dull and dark;
O heavy heart!

Break we our pipes that shrill'd as loud as lark,
O careful heart! Spenser.

Hark how the minstrel's shrill aloud
Then merry music that rebounds from far,
The pipe, the talor, and the trembling crowd,
That well agree withen breach or jar. Spenser.

A shrilling trumpet sounded from on high,
And unto battle bade themselves address. Shakespeare.

Here no clariion's shrilling note
The muse's green retreat can pierce;
The grove, from noisy camps remote,
Is only vocal with my verse. Pent. Ode to L. Gower.

The females' round,
Maids, wives, and matrons mix a shrilling sound.
Pope.

SHRILLY, adv. [from shrill.] With a shrill noise.

man; sermp, Danish.]

1. A small crustaceous vermiculated fish.
Of shell-fish there are wrinkles, shrimps, crabs.

Hanks and gulls can at a great height see mice on the earth, and shrimps in the water. Deham.

2. A little wrinkled man; a dwarf. In contempt.

It cannot be, this weak and writhled shrimp
Should strike such terror in his enemies. Shakespeare.

He hath found,
Within the ground,
At last, no shrimp,
Whereon to step
His jolly club. Ben Jonson.

SHRINE, n. f. [repin, Saxon; serinium, Lat.] A case in which something sacred is deposited.

You living pow'rs, inclin'd in stately shrine
Of growing trees; you rural gods that wield
Your scepters here, it to your ears divine
A voice may come, which troubled soul doth yield.
All the world come
To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint.
Shakespeare.

Come offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.
Shakespeare.

They often plac'd
Within his sanctuary itself their shrines,
Abominations! and with curst thurs
His holy rites profan'd.
Fasting on his knees before her shrine,
He thus supior'd her pow'r.
Lovers are in rapture at the name of their fair idol; they lavish out all their incense upon that

SHRINK, v. n. [shrink, Saxon; sercinium, Lat.] To contract; to be drawn together by internal power.

Upon a parchment, and against this fire
Do I shrink up. Shakespeare.

I have not found that water, by mixture of all,
will shrink or draw into less room.
It was'd ambition how much art thou shrink!
When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound;
But now two pieces of the vessel with Is room enough. Shakespeare.

2. To withdraw as from danger.
The note increaseth;
She comes, and feeble nature now I find
shrinks back in danger, and forakes my mind.
Dryden.

Nature stands aghast;
And the fair light which gilds this new-made orb,
Shorn of his beams, shrinks in. Dryden.

Love is a plant of the most tender kind,
That shrinks and shakes with every ruffling wind.
Granville.

For he went sickly forth. Shakespeare.

A pleasing cord is Buckingham,
Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart. Shakespeare.

Time tremes not now he wats his years to stoop,
Nor do his wings with sickly feathers droop. Dryden.

Would we know what health and ease are worth, let us ask one that is sickly, or in pain, and we have the price. Crow.

There affection, with a sickly mien,
Shows in her cheek the roses of eighteen;
Practis'd to hiss, and hang the head aside,
Faints into airs, and languishes with pride. Pope.

When on my sickly couch I lay,
Impotent both of night and day,
Then Stella ran to my relief. Swift.

Your bodies are not only poor and perishing, like your clothes; but like infected clothes, fill you with all diseases and distempers, which oppress the soul with sickly appetites, and vain cravings. Law.

2. Lament; weak; languid.

The moon grows sickly at the sight of day,
And early cools have summons'd us away. Dryden.

To enimate the doubtful fight,
Nourish in vain expects that my;
In vain France hopes the sidewind light
Should shine near William's fallow day. Prior.
To SICKLY. v. a. [from the adjective.]

Their weapons only

Seem'd on our side; but for their spirits and souls,

This word rebellion, it had froze them up,

As fish are in a pond. Shakespeare.

Favour, custom, and at last number, will be on the side of place. Spratt.

Men he always took to be

His friends, and dogs his enemy;

Who never so much hurt had done him,

As his own side did talking on him. Hudibras.

In the serious part of poetry the advantage is wholly on Chaucer's side. Dryden.

That person, who fills their chair, has justly gained the esteem of all sides by the impartiality of his behaviour. Addison.

Let not our James, though foil'd in arms, despair,

Whilst on his side he reckons half the war. Tickel.

Some valuing those of their own side, or rind,

Still make themselves the measure of mankind;

Kindly we think we honour merit there,

When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope.

He from the taste obscene reclaims our youth,

And in the passion on the side of truth;

Forms the soft bosom with the gentlest art,
And powers each human virtue in the heart. Pope.
7. Any part placed in contradistinction or opposition to another. It is used of persons, or propositions, respecting each other.

There began a sharp and cruel fight, many being slain and wounded on both sides. Knolles.

The plague is not easily received by such as consistently are about them that have it; on the other side, the plague taketh soonest hold of those that come out of a tresser. Bacon.

I am too well satisfied of my own weakness to be pleased with any thing I have written; but, on the other side, my reason tells me, that what I have long considered may be as just as what an ordinary judge will condemn. Dryden.

My secret wishes would my choice decide;

But open public heads to neutral side. Dryden.

and if there be factions, it is good to side a man's self whilst rising, and balance himself when placed. Bacon.

2. To take a party; to engage in a faction.

Vex'd are the nobles who have sided

In his behalf. Shakespeare.

As soon as discontents drove men into sides, as all humours fall to the disaffected part, which causes

inflammations, so did all who affected novelties adhere to that side. King Charles.

Terms rightly conceived, and notions duly fitted to them, require a brain free from all inclination to siding, or affection to opinions for the authors

sakes, before they be well understood. Dugby.

Not yet so dully desperate

To side against ourselves with fate;

As criminals, condemn'd to suffer,

Are blinded first, and then turn'd over. Hudibras.

The prices differ and divide;

Some follow law, and some with beauty side. Gronville.

It is pleasant to see a verse of an old poet revoking from its original source, and siding with a modern subject. Addison.

All sides in parties, and begin th' attack. Pope.

Those who pretended to be in with the side, plea upon which her majesty proceeded, rather she seated themselves where the whole could see ed, or sided with the enemy.

From a rough whitish maggot, in the infirm

rectum of horses, the sidelly proceeds. De la.

TO SIDLE. v. n. [from side.]

1. To go with the body the narrow

way.

The chaffering with dissenters is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a sidle, by which no more than one can get in at a time, and that not without stooping and siding, and squan-ding his body. Bay.

I pushed very gently and siding through the principal streets. Scott.

2. To lie on the side.

A fellow nail'd up maps in a gentleman's closome siding, and others up'd down, the better to adjust them to the pannels. Scott.

SIDELONG. adj. [side and long.] Laterally;

oblique; not in front; not direct.

She darted from her eyes a siding glance,

Just as the spoke, and like her words, it flew;

Seem'd not to beg what she then bid me do. Dry.

The deadly wound is in thy foot!

When thou a tempting harlot dost behold,

And when she casts on thee a siding glance,

Then try thy heart, and tell me if it dance. Dry.

DEWAYS. adv. [from side and way, or sidewise.] Laterally; on one side.

The fair blossom hangs the head
Sedate, as on a dying bed;
And those pearls of dew she wears
Prove to be prelagging tears. Milton.

If the image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refraction,
the same oblong image would, by a second refraction made sideways, be drawn out as much in breadth by the like dilatation of the rays, or other casual equality of the refraction sideways. Newton.

SIEGE. n. f. [siege, French.]

1. The act of besetting a fortified place; a besieger.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
And tumble ere them up. Shakespeare.

It seemed, by the manner of their proceeding, that the Turks purposed rather by long siege than by assault to take the town. Knolles.

The more I see
Measures about me, so much more I feel Firm and within me, as from the hateful siege
Of contraries. Milton.

2. Any continued endeavour to gain possession.

Beat away the busy meddling fiend,
That lays thou siege unto this wretch's soul,
And from his bosom purge this black despair. Shakespeare.

Give me so much of your time, in exchange of thine, to lay an unnamable siege to the honesty of Ford's wife. Shakespeare.

Love flood the siege, and would not yield his breath. Dryden.

3. [siege, Fr.] Seat; throne. Obsolete.

Drawing to him the eyes of all around,
From lofty siege began their words aloud to sound. Fairy Queen.

4. Place; class; rank. Obsolete.

I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege. Shakespeare.

Your sum of parts
Is not together pluck'd such envy from him,
As did that one, and that in my regard
Of the unworthiest siege. Shakespeare.

5. [siege, French.] Stool.

It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the pulsant parts, as the mouths of the udderlocks, and accompaneth the inconvertible portion unto the siege. Brown.

TO SIEGE. v. a. [sieger, Fr.] To besiege.

Not in use.

How he had long oppress'd with tort,
And fast imprison'd in sieged fort. Fairy Queen.

SIEVE. n. f. [from sift.] Hair or lawn strained upon a hoop, by which flower is separated from bran, or fine powder from coarse; a boulder; a searce.

Thy counsel
Tells now into my ears as profits
As water in a sieve. Shakespeare.

In a sieve I'll thither fall,
And, like a rat without a tail,
I'll do—I'll do—I'll do.

An innocent found a sieve, and presently fell to stopping the holes. L'Estrange.

If life sink through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself you had not while you might.

TO SIFT. v. a. [siften, Sax. siften, Dut.]

1. To separate by a sieve.

In the sifting of such favour, all that came out could not be expected to be pure meal, but must have a mixture of pander and bran. Hutton.

2. To separate; to part.

When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show. Dryden.

3. To examine; to try.

We have sifted your objections against those preeminences royal. Hooker.

All which the wit of Calvin could from thence draw, by sifting the very utmost sentence and syllable, is no more than that certain speeches seem to intimate, that all chaste churches ought to have their elderships. Hooker.

I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king thy sovereign is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart. Shakespeare.

As near as I could sift him on that argument.

Opportunity I here have had
To try thee, sift thee, and confess have found thee
Proof again! all temptation, as a rock
Of adamant. Milton.

One would think that every member, who embraces with vehemence the principles of either of these parties, had thoroughly sifted and examined them, and was secretly convinced of their preference to those he rejects. Adams.

SIFTER. n. f. [from sift.] He who sifts.

SIG was used by the Saxons for victory;
Sigbert, famous for victory; Sigward, victorious preserver; Sigard, conquering temper; and almost in the same sense are Nicolas, Nicomachus, Neander, Victor, Victorinus, Vincentius, &c. Gilson.

TO SIGH. v. n. [sighen, siechten, Saxon;
sichten, Dutch.] To emit the breath
audibly, as in grief.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath. Shakespeare.

I'll not be made a fit and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakespeare.

He sighed deeply in his spirit, and said, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? Mark.

For the oppression of the poor, for the sighting of the needy, will I rise. Isaiah.

Happier he,
Who seeks not pleasure through necessity,
Than such as once on slippery shores were plac'd,
And, chasing sigh to think themselves are chas'd. Dryden.

The nymph too longs to be alone;
Leaves all the swains, and sighs for one. Prior.

TO SIGH. v. a. To lament; to mourn.

Not in use.

Ages to come, and men unborn,
Shall bless her name, and sigh her fate. Prior.

SIGN. n. f. [from the verb.] A violent and audible emission of the breath which has been long retained, as in sadness.

Full often has my heart swollen with keeping my sighs imprison'd; full often have the tears I drove back from mine eyes turned back to drown my heart. Sidney.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs.
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes. Shakespeare.

What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charg'd.
Laughing, if loud, ends in a deep sigh; and all pleasures have a sigh in the tail, though they carry beauty on the face. Taylor.

In Venus' temple, on the sides were seen Issuing sighs, that smok'd along the wall. Dryden.

SIGHT. n. f. [geraete, Saxon; sicht, gezicht, Dutch.]

1. Perception by the eye; the sense of seeing.

It goes go forth right to a place, they must needs have sight. Milton.

O lots of sight, of thee I most complain!
Blind among enemies, O worse than chains,
Dungeon, or beggary, decrepit age! Milton.

Things invisible to mortal sight. Milton.

'Tis full the same, although their airy shape
All but a quick postlock sight escape. Denham.

My eyes are somewhat dimm'd grown;
For nature, always in the right,

To your decays adapts my sight. Swift.

2. Open view; a situation in which nothing obstructs the eye.

Undaunted Hotspur
Brings on his army, eager unto sight,
And plac'd the same before the king in sight. Daniel.

Aeneas cast his wond'ring eyes around,
And all the Tyrrhene army had in sight,
Stretch'd on the spacious plain from left to right! Dryden.

I met Brutidius in a mortal fright;
He's dipt for certain, and plays least in sight. Dryden.

3. Act of seeing or beholding; view.

Nine things to sight required are;
The power to see, the light, the visible thing,
Being not too small, too thin, too high, too far,
Clear space, and time, the form distinct to bring. Daniel.

Mine eyes pursued him full, but under shade
Lost sight of him. Milton.

What form of death could him affright,
Who unconcern'd, with Redball sight,
Could view the fumes mounting steep,
And monsters rolling in the deep? Dryden.

Having little knowledge of the circumstances of those St. Paul wrote to, it is not strange that many things he connected to us, which they who were concerned in the letter understood at last sight. Locke.

4. Notice; knowledge.

It was writ as a private letter to a person of piety upon an assurance that it should never come to any one's sight but her own. Wake.

5. Eye; instrument of seeing.

From the depth of hell they hit their sight,
And at a distance see supernal light. Dryden.

6. Aperture previous to the eye, or other point fixed to guide the eye: as, the sights of a quadrant.

Then aimed true, in charge, their beaver down,
Their eyes of fire twinkling through sights of steel. Shakespeare.

7. Spectacle; show; thing to be seen.

These are my eyes full captive to one sight;
Thus all my thoughts are slaves to one thought full. Sidney.

Them seem'd they never saw a sight so fair
Of loads to love, that they turn'd deem Them heavenly born. Spenser.

Not an eye
But is a-werry of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more. Shakespeare.

Moses said, I will turn aside and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt. Exodus.

I took a refuge at Naples to carry me to Rome, that I might not run over the same sights a second time. Adams.

Not proud Olympus yields a nobler sight,
Though gods assembled grace his tow'ring height,
Than what more humble mount may offer here,
Where, in their blessings, all those gods appear. Pope.

Before you pass the imaginary sights
Of lords, and cardinals, and dukes, and garter'd knights,
While the spread fan of ostentation your closing eyes,
Then gave one flint, and all the vision flies. Pope.

SIGHTEN. adj. [from sight.] Seeing in a particular manner. It is used only in composition, as quicksighted, shortsighted.

As they might, to avoid the weather, pull the Joins of the coach up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open fought as on horseback.

The king was very quick fought in discerning disclosures, and raising objections, and very slow in musing them.

SIGHTFULNESS, n. f. [from fight and full.] Perceptivity; clearness of sight. Not in use.

But still, although we fail of perfect rightfulness, Seek we to tame these childish superfluities; Lot us not wink, though void of purest sightfulness.

SIGHTLESS, adj. [from fight.] Blind.

1. Wanting sight; blind. The latest tracks, the giddy heights explore, Of all who blindly creep or fightless soar.

9. A subscription of one's name: as, a sign manual.

To SIGN, v. a. [from signo, Latin.]

1. To mark.

You sign your place and calling 'n full seeming, With meekness and humility, but your heart Is cramm'd with arrogance.

2. [from signo, Fr.] To ratify by hand or seal.

Be pleas'd to sign these papers: they are all Of great concern.

3. To betoken; to signify; to represent typically.

The sacraments and symbols are just such as they seem; but because they are made to be signs of a secret mystery, they receive the names of what themselves do sign.

SIGNAL, n. f. [from signal, Fr. señale, Span.]

Notice given by a sign; a sign that gives notice.

The weary sun hath made a golden set, And, by the bright track of his fiery ear,

Gives signal of a gaudy day to-morrow.

4. As, at a signal given, the streets with clamours ring.

SIGNAL, adj. [from signal, Fr.] Eminent; memorable; remarkable.

Proof of my life my royal signet made.

The impression of a signet ring.

SIGNIFICANCE, n. f. [from significatio.]

SIGNIFICANCY, n. f. [from significatio.]

1. Power of signifying; meaning.

Speaking is a sensible expression of the notion of the mind, by determinations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by content several determinate significances.

He declares he intends it for the honour of another, he takes away by his words the significance of his action.

2. Force; energy; power of impressing the mind.

The clearness of conception and expression, the boldness maintained to reject the significance and sound of words, not strained into bombast, will escape our transient view upon the theatre.

As far as this duty will admit of privacy, our favour hath enjoined it in terms of particular significance and force.

I have been admiring the wonderful significance of that word perfection, and what various interpretations it hath acquired.

3. Importance; moment; consequence.

How fatal would such a distinction have proved in former reigns, when many a circumscribed significance has been construed into an overt act of high treason.

SIGNIFICANT, adj. [from significans, Latin.]

1. Expressive of something beyond the external mark.

Since you are tongue-tied, and so loth to speak, In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts.

2. Betokening; standing as a sign of something.

It was well said of Plotinus, that the stars were significant, but not efficient.

3. Expressive or representative in an eminent degree; forcible to impress the intended meaning.

Whereas it may be objected, that to add to religious duties such rites and ceremonies as are significant, is to institute new sacraments.

Common life is full of the kind of significant expression, by knocking, beckoning, frowning, and painting; and dumb persons are sagacious in the use of them.

The Romans joined both devices, to make the emblem the more significant; as, indeed, they could not too much extol the learning and military virtues of this emperor.

4. Important; momentous. A low word.
SIGNIFICANTLY. adv. [from significant.]
With force of expression.

Christianity is known in scripture by no name so significantly as by the simplicity of the gospel.

SIGNIFICATION. n. f. [signification, Fr. significatio, Lat. from signify.]
1. The act of making known by signs.

A lie is properly a species of injustice, and a violation of the right of that person to whom the false speech is directed; for all speaking, or signification of one's mind, implies an act or address of one man to another.

2. Meaning expressed by a sign or word.

An adjective requireth another word to be joined with him, to shew his signification. Accident. Brute animals make divers motions to have several significations, to cull, warn, cherish, and threaten.

SIGNIFICATIVE. adj. [significatif, Fr. from signify.]
1. Betokening by an external sign.

The holy symbols or signs are not barely significant, but what by divine institution they represent and testify unto our souls, is truly and eternally delivered unto us.

2. Forceful; strongly expressive.

Neither in the degrees of kindred they were destitute of significant words; for whom we call grandfather, they called caldfader; whom we call great-grandfather, they called thirchfader.

SIGNIFICATORY. n. f. [from signify.]
That which signifies or betokens.

Here is a double significatory of the spirit, a word and a sign.

To SIGNIFY. v. a. [signifier, Fr. signifier, Lat.]

1. To declare by some token or sign; sometimes simply to declare.

Within the house your mistresses sit at hand.

The maid from that ill oven turn'd her eyes,
Nor knew what signified the bodling sign,
But found the power's displeas'd.

Those parts of nature, into which the chaos was divid'd, they signified by dark and obscure names, as the night, Tartarus, and Oceanus.

2. To mean; to express.

Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
That struts and reels his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more! It is a tale Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing!

By scripture, antiquity, and all ecclesiastical writers, it is constantly appropriated to Saturday, the day of the Jews' sabbath, and but of late years used to signify the Lord's day.

3. To support; to weigh. This is seldom used but interrogatively, what signifies?
or with much, little, or nothing.

Though he that sins frequently, and repents frequently, gives reason to believe his repentances before God signify nothing; yet that is nothing to us.

What signifies the splendour of courts, considering the slavish attendances that go along with it?

He hath one way more, which, although it signifies little to men of sober reason, yet unhappily his the supicious humour of men, that governors have a design to impose.

In the first of these last, the power of Adam, were never so great, will signify nothing to the present creatures in the world.

What signifies the people's consent in making and repealing laws, if the person who administers hath no tie?

4. To make known; to declare.

I'll to the king, and signify to him
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

He sent and signified it by his angel unto John.

The government should signify to the protestants of Ireland, that want of silver is not to be remedied.

To SIGNIFY. v. n. To express meaning with force.

If the words be but comely and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice; but where that wanteth, the language is thin.

SIGNIORY. n. f. [signoria, Italian.]
1. Lordship; dominion.

Through all the signories it was the first,
And Prospero the prime duke.

The earth, their titles, and their signiories,
They must restore again.

My brave progenitors, by valour, zeal,
Gain'd those high honours, princely signiories,
And proud prerogatives.

2. It is used by Shakespeare for seniority.
If ancient sorrow be most reverent,
Give mine the benefit of signiory.

And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.

SIGNPOST. n. f. [sign and post.] That upon which a sign hangs.

He should share with them in the preserving
A shed or signpost.

This noble invention of our author's hath been copied by so many signpost dawblers, that now it grown fulsome, rather by their want of skill than by the commonness.

SICKER. adj. and adv. See SICKER. The old word for sure, or surely.

SICKNESS. n. f. [from sicker.] Soreness; safety.

SILENCE. n. f. [silence, Fr. silentium, Latin.]

1. The state of holding peace; forbearance of speech.

Unto me men gave ear, and waited and kept silence at my counsel.

I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.

First to himself he inward silence broke.
Speech insensibly withdraws
From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause;
Then pompos silence reigns, and tills the noisy laws.

Here all their rage and ev'n their murmurs cease,
And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace.

2. Habitual taciturnity; not loquacity.
I think the best grace of wit will shortly turn us to silence, and discourse grow commendable in none but parrots.

3. Secrecy.

4. Stillness; not noise.
Hail, happy groves! calm and secure retreat
Of sacred silence, rest's eternal seat!

5. Not mention; oblivion; obscurity.
Nameless in dark oblivion let them dwell,
For strength from truth divid'd, and from just,
Inadable, naught merits but disgrace
And ignominy; yet to glory ascend,
Vain-glorious, and through many toils fame;
Therefore eternal silence be their doom.

Thus fame shall be unacknowledg'd,
And what most merits fame in silence hid.

SILENCE. interj. An authoritative restraint of speech.

Sir, have pity; I'll be his surety.—
—Silence! one word more

Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee,

To SILENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To oblige to hold peace; to forbid to speak.

We must silence the people, that to poverty
He would have made them quiet, silenc'd them pleaders, and

Dispersed their freedoms.
The ambassador is silenc'd.

Silence that dreadful bell; it frights the idle
From her propriety.

This pass'd as an oracle, and silenced those that moved the question.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenc'd, who being expos'd unto wolves, gave loud expressions of their faith, and were heard as high as heaven.

This would silence all further opposition.

Since in dark sorrow I my days did spend,
I could not silence my complaints.

Had they duly considered the extent of infinite knowledge and power, these would have silenced their scruples, and they had adored the amazing mystery.

It pleas'd him altogether to silence me, so that I shall not only speak with delicacy, but wholy be disabled to open my mouth, to any articulate utterance; yet I hope he will give me grace, even in my thoughts, to praise him.

2. To still.
These dying lovers, and their floating souls
Suspend the light, and silence all our gouts.

The thund'rer spoke, nor durst the queen reply
A reverend horn silenc'd all the sky.

SILENT. adj. [silens, Lat.]
1. Not speaking; mute.

O my God, I cry in the day time, and in the night season I am not silent.

Confounded, long they sat as stricken mute.

2. Not talkative; not loquacious.
Ulysses, add he, was the most eloquent and most silent of men; he knew that a word spoken never wrought to much good as a word concealed.

3. Still; having no noise.
Deep night, dark night, the silence of the night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when a reechowls cry, and ban-dogs howl.

Now is the pleasant time,
The cool, the silence, save where silence yields
To the night's warbling bird.

4. Wanting efficacy. I think a hebraist.
Second, and most important causes, together with nature itself, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become silent, virtuous, and dead.

The sun to me is dark,
And silent as the moon,
When the defects the night,
Had in her vault no light to show.

5. Not mentioning.
This new created world, whereof I tell Fame is not silent.

SILENTLY. adv. [from silent.]

The worms were hallow'd that did breed the silk;
And it was dyed in monny, which the kins
Confer'd of man's hearts. Shakespeare.

2. The stuff made of the worms thread.

Let not the creaking of shoes, or rattling of silks,
Betray thy poor heart to woman. Shakespeare.
He can't die the shore to be covered with Persian silk for him to tread upon. Knollys.

Without the worm, in Persian silks we shone. Waller.

SILKEN. adj. [from silk.]

1. Made of silk.

Men counsel and give comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but telling it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to rage,
Fetter strong madness in a silken thread,
Charm each with air, and agony with words. Shakespeare.

Now will we revel it,
With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings. Shakespeare.

She weeps, and words address'd seem tears dissol'd, Milton.

Wetting the borders of her silken veil.

2. Soft; tender.

Full many a lady fair, in court full oft Beholding them, him secretly envide,
And wou'd that two such fans, so silken soft,
And golden hair, her love would her provide. Spenser.

All the youth of England are on fire,
And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies. Shakespeare.

For then the hills with pleasing shades are crown'd, Shakespeare.

And sleeps are sweeter on the silken ground than Drest up virtue in all the beauties of oratory, and you will find the wild passions of men too violent to be restrained by such mild and silken language. Watts.

3. Dressed in silk.

Shall a beardless boy,
A cocker'd, silken wanton, have our fields,
And flesh his spirit in a warlike food,
Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
And find no check? Shakespeare.

The farmer's goose,
Grown fat with corn, and sitting still,
Can scarce get o'er the barn-door sill;
And hardly waddles forth. Swift.

SILLABUS. n. f. [This word has exercised the etymologists. Mintheu thinks it corrupted from suillingbubbles. Junius omits it. Hughart, whom Skinner follows, deduces it from the Dutch full, a pipe, and buyck, a paunch; because silla- bus are commonly drunk through a spout, out of a jug with a large belly. It seems more probably derived from sil, in old English, vinegar; sil a bouc, vinegar for the mouth, vinegar made pleasant.]

Cuirs made by milking upon vinegar.

Joan takes her vent rubb'd pail, and now
She trips to walk the sand-red cow:
Where, for some sturdy foot-ball swain,
Joan strokes a sillabus or twain. Hutton.

A feast,
By some rich farmer's wife and filer dress'd,

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye-beams, when their sixth rays have more. Shakespeare.

The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows,
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright,
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light. Shakespeare.

4. Soft of voice. This phrase is Italian, voce argentina.

From all the groves, which with the heavenly noises

Of their sweet instruments were wont to sound,
And th' hollow hills, from which their jute voices

Were wont redoubled echoes to rebound,
Did now rebound with nought but rueful cries,
And yelling thricks thrown up into the skies. Spenser.

It is my love that calls upon my name;
How silver sweet found lovers tongues by night!
Take notice music to attending ears. Shakespeare.

Of all th' enamell'd race whose sil'ry wing waves to the tepid nephyrs of the spring, Once brightest thind this child of heat and air. Duncin.

SIMAR. n. f. [smarre, Fr.] A woman's robe.

The ladies dress'd in rich simars were seen, Of Florence satins, flower'd with white and green. Dryden.

SIMILAR. } adj. [similaire, Fr. from
SIMILARY. } similis, Lat.]

1. Homogeneous; having one part like another; uniform.

Minerals appear to the eye to be perfectly similar, as metals; or at least to consist but of two or three distinct ingredients, as cinnabar. Boyle.

2. Resembling; having resemblance.
The laws of England, relative to those matters, were the original and exemplar from whence those similar or parallel laws of Scotland were derived. Hale.

SIMILARITY. n. f. [from similar.] Likeness; uniformity.

The blood and chyle are mixed, and by attrition attenuated, by which the mixture acquires a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts. Arbuthnot.

SIMILE. n. f. [simile, Lat.] A comparison by which any thing is illustrated or aggrandized.

Their rhimes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,
Want similes. Shakspeare.

Lucentio slipp'd me, like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master.--
--A good swift simile, but something curiouth. Shakspeare.

In argument,
Similes are like songs in love;
They much describe, they nothing prove. Prior.

Poets, to give a loose to a warm fancy, not only expatiate in their similes, but introduce them too frequently. Garth.

SIMILITUDE. n. f. [similitudo, Fr. similitudo, Lat.]

1. Likeness; resemblance.
Similitude of substance would cause attraction, where the body is wholly freed from the motion of gravity, for then lead would draw lead. Bacon.

Our immortal souls, while righteous, are by God himself sanctified with the title of his own image and similitude. Raleigh.

Let us make man in our image, man
In our similitude, and let them rule
Over the fish and fowl. Milton.

Similitude to the Deity was not regarded in the things they gave divine worship to, and looked on as symbols of the god they worshipped. Stillingfleet.

If we compare the picture of a man, drawn at the years of seventeen, with that of the same person at the years of threescore, hardly the least trace or similitude of one face can be found in the other. South.

Fate some future hard shall join
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image chains he must behold no more. Pope.

2. Comparison; simile.
Plutarch, in the first of his tractates, by sundry similitudes, shews us the force of education. Walton.

Poets, in his similitudes, never departed from the woods; that is, all his comparisons were taken from the country. Dryden.

SIMILAR. n. f. [See Cimeter.] A crooked or falcated sword with a convex edge.

TO SIMMER. v. n. [a word made probably from the sound, but written, by Skinner, Amber.] To boil gently; to boil with a gentle hissing.

Place a vessel in warm fluid, increasing the heat by degrees, till the spirit simmer or boils a little. Boyle.

Their vital heat and moisture may always not only simmer in one sluggish tenour, but sometimes boil up higher, and seeth over; the fire of life being more than ordinarily kindled upon some emergent occasion. More.

SIMNEL. n. f. [simnellus, low Latin.] A kind of sweet bread or cake.

SIMONIACK. n. f. [simoniack, Fr. simoniacus, Latin.] One who buys or sells preferment in the church.

If the bishop alleges that the person presented is a simoniack, or unlearned, they are to proceed to trial. Aylmer.

SIMONIACAL. adj. [from simoniack.] Guilty of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment.

Add to your criminals the simoniack ladies, who seduce the sacred order into the difficulty of breaking their troth. Spectator.

SIMONY. n. f. [simonie, Fr. simonia, Lat.] The crime of buying or selling church preferment.

One that by suggestion
Tied all the kingdom; simony was fair play,
His own opinion was his law. Shakspeare.

Many papers remain in private hands, of which one is of simony; and I with the world might see it, that it might undeceive some patrons, who think they have discharged that great trust to God and man, if they take no money for a living, though it may be plaited with far other ends less justifiable. Hallam.

No simony nor sinecure is known;
There works the bee, no honey for the drone. Garth.

TO SIMPER. v. n. [from pymbelan, Saxon, to keep holyday, Skinner.] He derives simmer from the same word, and confirms his etymology by writing it simber. It is perhaps derived from simmer, as it may seem to imitate the dimples of water gentle boiling.] To smile; generally to smile foolishly.

A made countenance about her mouth between simpering and smiling, her head bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-much idleness. Salm.

I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, as I perceive by your simpering none of you hate them, to like as much as please them. Shakspeare.

Stuns above simper, and thine,
As having keys unto thy love, while poor I pine. Herbert.

Let then the fair one beautifully cry,
Or dress in smiles of sweet Cecilia's name,
With simpering angels, palms, and harps divine. Pope.

SIMPER. n. f. [from the verb.] Smile, generally a foolish smile.

The wit at his elbow flared him in the face with so bewitching a grin, that the whittier relaxed his fibres into a kind of simper, and at length burst out into an open laugh. Addison.

Great Tabbald nods; the proud Parusian liver,
The conscious simper, and the jealous leer,
Mix on his look. Pope.

SIMPLER. adj. [simpler, Lat. simplex, Fr.]

1. Plain; artless; unskilled; undeighting; sincere; humbled.

Were it not to lusty the minds of the simpler sort of men, these nice curiosities are not worthy the labour which we bestow to answer them. Hooker.

They meet upon the way
A simpler husbandman in garments grey. Hub. Tol.

I am a simpler woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. Shakspeare.

O Ebelinda,
My heart was made to fit and pair with thine,
Simple and plain, and taught with artless tenderness. Bosc.

In simple suanners all the secret lies;
Be kind and virtuous, you'll be blest and wise. Young.

2. Uncompounded; unmingled; single; only one; plain; not complicated.

To make the compound path for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting. Bacon.
Simple philosophically signifies single, but vulgarly foolish. Watts.

Among substances, some are called simple, some compound, whether taken in a philosophical or vulgar sense. If we take simple and compound in a vulgar sense, then all those are simple substances which are generally esteemed uniform in their natures: for every herb is called a simple, and every metal a mineral, though the chymist perhaps may find all these several elements in each of them. Watts.

Let Newton, pure intelligence, whom God
To mortal's lent, to trace his boundless works,
From laws, sublimely simple, speak thy name
In all philosophy. Thomson.

3. Silly; not wise; not cunning.
The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going. Proverbs.

Deck, simple odes too many show ye
My servile compliance to Chloe. Prior.

SIMPLE. n. f. [simple, French.] A single ingredient in a medicine; a drug. It is popularly used for an herb.

Of simples in these groves that grow,
We'll learn the perfect skill;
The nature of each herb to know,
Which cures, and which can kill. Dryden.

Our softer nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whole power
Will close the eye of anguish. Shakspeare.

He would ope his leathern scrip,
And show me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.

What virtue is in this remedy lies in the naked simple, as it comes over from the lutes. Temple.

Around its entries nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing floods it on the silent plains. Dryden.

Medicine is mine: what herbs and simples grow
In fields and forests, all their powers I know. Dry.

TO SIMPLE. v. n. To gather simples.

As once the foaming boar he chas'd,
Inferious Cice swell the youth furvey'd,
As simples on the flow'ry hills he stray'd. Garth.

SIMPLENESS. n. f. [from simple.] The quality of being simple.

I will hear that play;
For never any thing can be unife,
When simples and duty tender it. Shakspeare.

Such perfect elements may be found in these four known bodies that we call pure ones; for they are least compounded, and approach most to the simplicity of the elements. Digby.

SIMPLE. n. f. [from simple.] A simplist; an herbant.

SIMPLIS. n. f. [simplis, Fr.] Simplicity; silliness; folly. Obsolete.

Then weeds been not so nobly were,
Such simplis brought them then to,
They be a yet in purple and pall,
They reign and rub in over all. Spenser.

SIMPLES. n. f. [from simple.] A silly mortal; a simple; a foolish fellow. A low word.

A country house sent his man to look after an ox,
The simple went hunting up and down. Elfr.

Those letters may prove a detriment, as having as many simples, or various simples, can make it. Pope.

SIMPLICITY. n. f. [simplitas, Latin.] Simplis, French.]

1. Plainness; artlessness; not subtilty; not cunning; not deceit.

The two-eyed-minded I believe was in their degree of well-doing, to whom the not knowing of evil serveth for a ground of virtue, and hold their inward powers in better form, with an unspotted simplis, than many who rather cunningly try to know what goodness is, than willingly take into themselves the following of it. Smeag.

They keep the reverend simplicity of ancient times.

In low simplicity,

He lends out money gratis, and brings down

The rate of usance.

Marquis Dufferin, a man for his hereditary simplicity neither mistaked nor much regarded, was created duke.

Suspicion sleeps

At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity

Redeign her charge.

Of manners gentle, of affections mild;

In wit a man, simplicity a child.

The native elegance and simplicity of her manners were accompanied with real benevolence of heart.

1. Plainness; not subtilty; not abstruseness.

There enter into farther speculations herein, which is the itch of curiosity, and content not themselves with the simplicity of that doctrine, within which this church hath contained herself.

3. Plainness; not finery.

They represent our poet, when he left Mantua for Rome, dressed in his best habit, too fine for the place whence he came, and yet retaining part of his simplicity.

4. Singleness; not composition; state of being uncompounded.

Mandrakes afford a papaverous unpleasant odour in the leaf or apple, discoverable in their simplicity and mixture.

We are led to conceive that great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity than now it is, as to conceive a watch

once in its first and simple materials.

5. Weakness; silliness.

Many that know what they should do, would nevertheless dissemble it, and, to excuse themselves, pretend ignorance and simplicity, which cannot.

How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity,

and fools hate knowledge?

SIMPLIST. n. f. [from simple.] One skilled in simples.

A plant so unlike a rose, it hath been mistaken

by some good simplists for anemum.

SIMPLY. adv. [from simple.]

1. Without art; without subtilty; plainly;

artlessly.

Accomplishing great things by things seem'd weak:

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise

By simply weak.

2. Of itself; without addition.

This question about the changing of laws concerneth

only such laws as are positive, and do make that now good or evil, by being commanded or forbidden, which otherwise of itself were not simply the one or the other.

3. Merely; solely.

Under man, no creature in the world is capable of felicity and bliss; because their chiefest perfection consisteth in that which is best for them, but not in that which is simply best, as ours doth.

I will eat and drink, and sleep as fast

As captain shall; simply the thing I am shall make me live.

To say or to do ought with memory and imitation,

no purpose or respect should sooner move us, than simply the love of God and of mankind.

4. Foolishly; sillily.

SIMULAR. n. f. [from simulo, Latin.] One that counterfeits.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,

Thou perjurur, thou simulant of virtue,

That art incestuous.

SIMULATION. n. f. [simulation, French; simulatio, from simulo, Latin.] That part of hypocrisy which pretends that to be which is not.

Simulation is a vice rising of a natural subtlety, or fearfulness; or of a mind that hath some main fault; which, because a man must needs disguise,

it useth his practice simulation.

For the unquestionable virtue of her person and mind, he well expressed his love in an act and time of simulation towards his end, bequeathing her all his mansion-houses, and a power to dispose of his whole personal estate.

For distinction sake, a deceiving by word is commonly called a lye; and deceiving by actions, gestures, or behaviour, is called simulation or hypocrisy.

SIMULTANEOUS. adj. [simultaneus, Lat.]

Acting together; existing at the same time.

If the parts may all change places at the same time, without any respect of priority or posteriority to each other's notion, why may not bullets, closely crowded in a box, move by a like mutual and simultaneous exchange?

SIN. n. f. [syn, Saxon.]

1. An act against the laws of God; a violation of the laws of religion.

It is great sin to swear unto a sin.

But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.

How hast thou the heart,

Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,

A sin abuser, and my friend profest,

To mangle me with that word bannishment?

Put those that sleep, and think not on their sin,

Punch them.

Thou knowest, Lord, that I am pure from all sin

with man.

2. Habitual negligence of religion.

Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks upon

him.

And all their ministers attend on him.

Dishonest thames

Of nature's works: honour dishonourable,

Sin-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind!

I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds,

With the rank vapours of the sin-worn mould.

Is there no means, but that a sin-sick land

Should be let blood with such a bossy hand?

Vice or virtue chiefly imply the relation of our actions to men in this world: sin and holiness

rather imply their relation to God and the other world.

Light from her thought, a summer's careless robe,

Fell each affection of this sin-worn globe.

3. It is used by Shakespeare emphatically for a man enormously wicked.

Thy ambition,

Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land

Of noble Buckingham.

TO SIN. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To neglect the laws of religion; to violate the laws of religion.

Stand in awe and sin not.

Many also have perisht, err'd, and sinned for women.

He shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death.

2. To offend against right.

I am a man

More sin-d against than sinning.

And who but wishes to invert the laws

Of order, *sin*s against th' eternal cause.

SINCERE. adv. [formed by contraction from

sintence, or sith thence, from pride, Sax.]

1. Because that.

Since the clearest discoveries we have of other spirits, besides God and our own souls, are imparted by revelation, the information of them should be taken from thence.

Since truth and constancy are vain,

Since neither love, nor sense of pain,

Nor force of reason, can persuade,

Then let example be obey'd.

2. From the time that.

Am not I thine since upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day?

He is the most improved mind since you saw him that ever was.

3. Ago; before this.

About two years since, it so fell out, that he was brought to a great lady's house.

Spies held me in check, that I was fore'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, in Half an hour since, brought my report.

A law was made no longer since than the twenty-eighth of Henry the Eighth.

How many ages since has Virgil writ!

SINCE. preposition. After; reckoning from some time past to the time present.

He since the morning hour set out from heaven

If such a man arise, I have a model by which he may build a nobler poem than any extant piece

the ancients.

SINCERE. adj. [sincerus, Lat. sincere, Fi.]

1. Unhurt; uninjured.

He tried a tough well chosen spear;

The inviolable body stood sincere.

2. Pure; unmingled.

Pardon my tears, 'tis joy which bids them flow,

A joy which never was sincere till now;

That which my conquest gave I could not prize,

Or 'twas imperfect, till I saw your eyes.

The pleasures of sense, beaute taste sincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them.

Animal substances differ from vegetable, in that,

being reduced to ashes, they are perfectly indisp,

and in that there is no sincere acid in any animal juice.

In English I would have all gellicious avoided, that our tongue may be sincere, and that we may keep to our own language.

3. Honest; undissembling; uncorrupt.

This top proud fellow,

Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but

From sincere notions by intelligence

I do know to be corrupt.

Nor troubled at their tidings from the earth,

Which your sincere care could not prevent;

Foretold so lately what would come to pass,

When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell.

The more sincere you are, the better it will fare with you at the great day of account. In the mean while, give us leave to be sincere too, in condemning heartily what we heartily disapprove. Walter

Through the want of a sincere intention of pleat-

ing God in all our actions, we fall into such irregularities of life as, by the ordinary means of grace,

we should have power to avoid.

SINCERELY. adv. [from sincere.] Honestly; without hypocrisy; with purity of heart.

The purer and perfecter our religion is, the worthier effects it hath in them who stedfastly and

sincerely embrace it.

That you may, fair lady,

Perceive I speak sincerely, the king's majesty

Does purpose honour to you.

In your whole reasoning, keep your mind sincere intent in the pursuit of truth.

SINCERENESS. n. f. [sincerité, French; SINCERITY. n. f. [from sincere.]

1. Honesty of intention; purity of mind.

Jesus Christ has purchased for us terms of recociliation, who will accept of sincerity instead of perfection; but then this sincerity implies our honest endeavours to do our utmost.

2. Freedom from hypocrisy.

In thy comfort cease to fear a foe;

For thee she feels sincerity of woe.

SINDON. n. f. [Lat.] A fold; a wrapper.

There were found a book and a letter, both written in fine parchment, and wrapped in sindon of linen.

SINE. n. f. [sinus, Latin.] A right sine, in geometry, is a right line drawn from one end of an arch perpendicularly upon the diameter drawn from the other end of that arch; or it is half the chord of twice the arch.

Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio.

SINCE. n. f. [fin, without, and cure, care.] An office which has revenue without any employment.
A sin is a house without cure of souls. Ayliffe.

No honey nor sin were known,
Nor would the bee work honey for the drone. Garth.
SIN. n. f. [senpe, Saxon; senwen, Dutch.]

1. A tendon; the ligament by which the joints are moved.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews. Shakespeare
The routed fibres rose, and from the wound
Black bloody drops disall'd upon the ground:
Mute and unarm'd, my hair with terror stood;
My trunk my sinews, and congeal'd my blood. Dryden.

A sin cracked seldom recovers its former firmness.

2. Applied to whatever gives strength or compactness: as, money is the sin of war.

Some other sin there are, from which that Overflow of strength in perfection doth arise. Hooker.
Such discouraging of men in the ways of an active conformity to the church's rules, weakens the sin of government; for it weakens and damp the spirits of the obedient. South.

In the principal figures of a picture, the painter employs the sin of his art; for in them contains the principal beauties of his work. Dryden.

3. Mufcle or nerve.
The feeling pow'r, which is life's root,
Through ev'ry living part itself doth shed
By sin, which extend from head to foot;
And, like a net, all o'er the body spread. Davies.
To SIN, v. a. [from the noun.] To knit as by sin. Not in use.

Ask the lady Bona for thy queen;
So shalt thou sin both these lauds together. Shakespeare.

SIN. adj. [from sinew.]

1. Furnished with sin.
Strong sin was the youth, and big of bone. Dryden.

2. Strong; firm; vigorous.
He will the rather do it, when he sees Ourselves well sin to our defence. Shakespeare.

SIN. adj. [sinew and shrunk.]
A horse is said to be sin when he has been over-ridden, and so fatigued that he becomes gaunt-bellied, by a stiffness and contraction of the two sin which are under his belly. Farrier's Dict.

SIN. adj. [from sinew.]

1. Consisting of a sin; nervous. The nerves and sin are in poetry often confounded, from nervus, Latin, which signifies a sin.

The sin thread my brain lets fall
Through ev'ry part,
Can tie those parts, and make me one of all. Donne.

2. Strong; nervous; vigorous; forcible.
And for thy vigour,
Ball-bearing Milo his addition yields
To sin. Shakespeare.

Worthy fellows, and like to prove
Most sin swordsmen. Shakespeare.
The northern people are large, fair-complexioned, strong, sin, and courageous. Hale.

Fasting, as he reach'd the shore,
He dropt his sin: his knees no more

SIN. adj. [sin and full.]

1. Alien from God; not holy; unsanc-tified.

Drive out the sin pair,
From hallow'd ground th' unholy. Milton.

2. Wicked; not observant of religion; contrary to religion. It is used both of persons and things.

Twice happy man, said then the father grave,
Whose staggering steps thy steady hand doth lead.
And shows the way his sin soul to save,
Who better can the way to heaven tread. Fairy Qu.
Nature herself, though pure of sin thought,
Wrought in her fo, that, seeing me, she turn'd. Milton.

The monks looked upon all passions as sin
defects and irregularities, as so many deviations from right reason, making pathos to be only another word for perurbation. South.

SIN. adj. [from sinful.] Wickedly; not piously; not according to the ordinance of God.

All this from my remembrance brutish wrath
*Sin*fully pluck'd, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my mind. Shaksp.

The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others *sin*fully and difficultly, and perhaps unsuccessfully too. South.

SIN. n. f. [from sinful.] Alienation from God; neglect or violation of the duties of religion; contrariety to religious goodness.

I am sent
To shew thee what shall come in future days
To thee, and to thy offspring: good with had Expect to hear; supernal grace contending
With *sin*ful of men. Milton.

Peculiarities, the general fault of sick persons, is equally to be avoided for the folly and *sin*ful. Wake.

To SIN. v. n. preterit I sang or sung;
participle pass. sung. [Saxon, Saxon;
singia, Islandick; singhen, Dutch.]

1. To form the voice to melody; to articulate musically.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his musick plants and flowers
Ever spring, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring. Shakespeare.
Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And a time for sorrow sung. Shakespeare.

They rather had beheld Difficult numbers perling streets, than see
Our traidelmen singing in their shops, and going
About their functions friendly. Shakespeare.

The morning stars sung together. Job.
Then shall the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the Lord. Chromicles.

Their airy limbs in sports they exercise,
Some in herock verse divinely sung. Dryden.

2. To utter sweet sounds inarticulately.
The time of the singing of birds is come.

You will sooner bind a bird from singing than from flying. Bacon.

Join voices, all ye birds,
That singing up to heaven's gate ascend. Milton.
And parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing birds, in silver cages hung. Dryden.

Oh! were I made, by some transforming pow'r,
The captive bird that sings within thy bow'r,
Then might my voice thy list'ning ears employ,
And I those kisses he receives enjoy. Pope.

3. To make any small or shrill noise.
A man may hear this flower sing in the wind. Shakespeare.

You leaden muskengers,
Fly with talc aim; pierce the fill moving air,
That sings with piercing; do not touch my lord. Shakespeare.

We hear this fearful tempest sing. Shakespeare.
O'er his head the flying spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

4. To tell in poetry.

Bid her exult her melancholy wing,
And raise'd from earth, and shav'd from passion, sing
Of human hope by cross event destroy'd,
Of useless wealth, and greatness unenjoy'd. Prior.

To SING. v. a.

1. To relate or mention in poetry.
All the prophets in their age the times
Of great Messiah sung. Milton.

I sing the man who Judah's sceptre bore
In that right hand which held the crook before. Cowley.

Arms and the man I sing. Dryden.
Well might he sing the day he could not fear.
And paint the glories he was sure to wear. Smith.

2. To celebrate; to give praises to, in verse.

The last, the happiest British king,
Whom thou shalt paint or I shall sing. Addison.

3. To utter harmoniously.

Incles, caddises, cambricks, lawns, why he sings
them over as they were gods and goddesses. Shaksp.
They that walked as required of us worth, saying,
Sing as one of the songs of Zion. Psalms.
How could we to his godhead sing
Fore'd hallelujahs? Milton.

To SING. v. a. [Saxon, Sax. senghen, Dut.] To scorch; to burn slightly or superficially.

They bound the doctor, Whose beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire. Shakespeare.

Drake, in the vaunting stile of a soldier, would call this enterprise the singing of the king of

delights of the sons of men. Ecclesiastes.

To the chief singer on my singed instruments,
Habakkuk.

Cockbirds amongst singing birds are over the better singers, because they are more lively. Bacon.
Thy heart no ruder than the rugged stone,
I might, like Orpheus, with my numerous mourn
Melt to compassion: now my trait'rous song
With thee conspires to do the singer wrong. Waller.

The birds know how to chaite their time;
To peck this fruit they all forbear:
Those cheerful singers know not why
They should make any haste to die. Waller.

The Grecian tragedy was at first nothing but a chorus of singers. Dryden.

SINGINGMASTER. n. f. [sing and master.]

One who teaches to sing.

them rightly in the tunes of the psalms. Addison.

SING. adj. [singulus, Latin.]

1. One; not double; not more than one.

The words are clear and easy, and their originals are of sing signification without any ambiguity. South.

Some were sing nets, though each complete;
But ev'ry net flood ready to repeat. Dryden.
Then Thebes join'd with bold Philbus came,
A sing concord in a double name. Dryden.

High Alha,
A lonely desert, and an empty land,
Shall scarce afford, for needful hours of rest,
A sing house to them benighted guest. Addison.

Where the poetry or history sings a sing reading is not sufficient to furnish a mind that has a true taste; nor can we make the talk it improvement of them without proper reviews. Watts.

2. Particular; individual.

As sing sing is born with a right of controul-
ing the opinions of all the rest, so the world has no title to demand the whole time of any particular person. Pope.

If one sing word were to express but one simple idea, and nothing else, there would be scarce any mistake. Watts.

3. Not compounded.

As simple ideas are opposed to complex, and sing ideas to compound, so propositions are distinguished.

the English tongue has some advantage above the learned languages, which have an usual word to distinguish single from simple. Warton

4. Alone; having no companion; having no assistant.

Servant of God, well hast thou fought
The better fight, who single hast maintain'd Against revolved multitudes the cause of truth. Milton

His wisdom such,
Three kingdoms wonder, and three kingdoms fear,
Whilst single he stood forth. Denham

In sweet possession of the fairy place,
Single, and conscious to myself alone
Of pleasures to th' excluded world unknown. Dryden

5. Unmarried.

Is the single man therefore blessed? no: as a walled town is more worthier than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor. Shakespeare

Pygmalion
Abhor'd all womankind, but most a wife;
So single chose to live, and shunn'd to wed,
Well pleas'd to want a comfort of his bed. Dryden

6. Not complicated; not duplicated.

To make flowers double, is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary, double flowers, by neglecting and not removing, prove single. Bacon

7. Pure; uncorrupt; not double-minded; simple. A scriptural sense.

The light of the body is the eye: if thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. Matthew

SINGULF, n. f. [singulus, Lat.] A fish.

SINISTER, adj. [sinister, Latin.]

1. Being on the left hand; left; not right; not dexter. It seems to be used with the accent on the second syllable, at least in the primitive, and on the first in the figurative sense.

My mother's blood

Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister

Bounds in my fire's. Shakespeare

Captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek. Shakespeare

But a rib,

Crook'd by nature, bent, as now appears,

More to the part sinister from me drawn. Milton

The spleen is unjustly introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, being dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate it. Brewer

In his sinister hand, instead of ball,

He plac'd a mighty mass of potent ale. Dryden

2. Bad; perverse; corrupt; deviating from honesty; unfair.

Is it to strangle a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is yet therefore a bribe to such as favour the same cause with a better and more meaning? Hooker

The duke of Clarence was slain after his sinister means made clean away. Shakespeare

What are there more unworthy men chosen to office, when is there more strife and contention about elections, or when do partial and sinister affections more utter themselves, than when an election is committed to many? Whately

He professes to have received no sinister motions from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice. Shakespeare

Those may be accounted the left hands of courts; persons that are full of nimble and sinister tricks and shifts, whereby they pervert the plain courses of courts, and bring justice into oblique lines and labyrinth. Bacon

The just person has given the world an assurance, by the constant tenor of his practice, that he makes a conscience of his ways, and that he seems to undermine another's interest by any sinister or inferior arts. South

3. [sinistre, Fr.] Unlucky; inauspicious.

The accent is here on the second syllable.

Tempt it again; that is thy art, or none:

What all the several ills that visit earth,

Brought forth by night with a sinister birth,

Plagues, famine, fire, could not reach unto,

The sword, nor surfeits, let thy fury do. Ben Jonson

SINISTROUS, adj. [sinister, Lat.]

Al-

furd; perverse; wrong-headed; in French, gauche.

A knave or fool can do no harm, even by the most sinistrous and absurd choice. Lucas

SINISTROUSLY, adv. [from sinistrous.]

1. With a tendency to the left.

sank; part. sunk or sunken. [German,

Saxon; senken, German.]

1. To fall down through any medium; not to swim; to go to the bottom.

As rich with prize,

As is the oozy bottom of the sea

With sunk wreck and sunless treasures. Shakespeare

In with the river sunk, and with it rose

Satan, mov'd in rising mist; then fought

Where to lie hid. Milton

He swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies. Milton

The people sunk with his ill-gotten gains.
And nothing to another's ale remains. Dryden.
Supposing several in a tempest will rather perish than work, would it not be madness in the rest to chafe to sink together, rather than do more than their share? Addison.

2. To fall gradually.

The arrow went out at his heart, and he sunk
down in his chariot. Shakespeare.

3. To enter or penetrate into any body.

David took a stone and flung it, and smote the Philistine, that the stone sunk into his forehead. 1 Samuel.

4. To lose height; to fall to a level.

In vain has nature form'd
Mountains and oceans to oppose his passage;
He bounds o'er all, victorious in his march,
The Alps and Pyreneans sink before him. Addison.
To lose or want prominence.

What were his marks?—A lean cheek, a blue eye and sunken. Shakespeare.
Deep-lined wrinkles on her cheeks she draws;
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden.

6. To be overwhelmed or depressed.

Our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds, and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds. Shakespeare.

They arraign'd shall sink
Beneath thy sentence. Milton.
But if you thus ambitious pray'r deny,
Then let me sink beneath proud Arcite's arms;
And, I once dead, let him possess her charms. Dryden.

At Saga in Germany they dig up iron in the fields by sinking ditches two feet deep, and in the space of ten years the ditches are digged again for iron since produced. Boyle.

3. To delve; to make by delving.

Near Geneva are quarries of freestone, that run under the lake: when the water is at lowest, they make within the borders of it a little square, inclosed with four walls: in this square they sink a pit, and dig for freestone. Addison.

4. To depress; to degrade.

A mighty king I am, an earthly god;
I rule or sink, imprison, or let free;
And dear death depends on my decree. Prior.
Trifling painters or sculptors bellow infinite pains upon the most insignificant parts of a figure, till they sink the grandeur of the whole. Pope.

5. To plunge into destruction.

Heav'n bear witness,
And, if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
As it has the as falls, if I do not faithful. Shaksp.

6. To make to fall.

There are to far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some before standing, and undermine others, sinking them into the abyss. Woodward.

6. To bring low; to diminish in quantity.

When on the banks of an unlook'd-for stream,
You sunk the river with repeated draughts,
Who was the last in all your host that thirsted? Addison.

7. To crush; to overbear; to depress.

That Hector was in certainty of death, and depressed with the conscience of an ill cause: if you will not grant the first of these will sink the spirit of a hero, you'll at least allow the second may. Pope.

8. To diminish; to degrade.

They catch at all opportunities of ruining our trade, and sinking the figure which we make. Addison.
I mean not that we should sink our figure out of covetousness; and deny ourselves the proper conveniences of our station, only that we may lay up a superfluous treasure. Rogers.

9. To make to decline.

Thy cruel and unnatural lust of power
Has sunk thy father more than all his years,
And made him wither in a green old age. Rowe.
To labour for a sunk corrupted state. Lyttleton.

10. To suppress; to conceal; to intervert.

nells flow to one sink, to shunt their numbers increased. Hayward.

Another more silt than any sink in town. Grav.
Returning home at night, you'll find the sink
Strike your offended sense with double stink. Swift.

2. Any place where corruption is gathered.

What sink of monsters, wretches of lost minds,
Mad after change, and desperate in their fates,
Wearied and gull'd with their necessities,
Durst have thought it? Ben Jonson.

Our soul, whole country's heav'n, and God her father,
Into this world, corruption's sink, is sent;
Yet so much in her travail the doth gather,
That the returns home wiser than she went. Donne.

SINKLESS. adj. [from sin.] Exempt from sin.

Led on, yet sinkless, with desire to know
What nearer might concern him. Milton.
At that talked fruit

The sun, as from Thyeist an banquet, turn'd
His counte intended; else how had the world
Inhabited, though sinkless, more than now
Avoided pinching cold, and searhing heat? Milton.

Internal ghosts and hellish furies round Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some streak'd, some bent at thee their fiery darts, while thou Satt'st unappall'd in calm and sinkless peace. Milton.

No thoughts like mine his sinkless soul profane,
Observant of the night. Dryden.
Did God, indeed, insist on a sinkless and morning observance of all this multiplicity of duties; had the Christian dispensation provided no remedy for our lapses, we might cry out with Balaam, Alas!
who should live, if God did this? Rogers.

SINKLESSNESS. n. f. [from sinkless.] Exemption from sin.

We may the less admire at his gracious conde-scensions to those, the sinkless of whose condition will keep them from turning his vouchsafements into any thing but occasions of joy and gratitude. Boyle.

SINKER. n. f. [from sin.]

1. One at enmity with God; one not truly or religiously good.

Let the boldest sinker take this one consideration along with him, when he is going to sin, that whether the sin he is about to act ever comes to be pardoned or no, yet, as soon as it is acted, it quite turns the balance, puts his salvation upon the venture, and makes it ten to one odds against him. South.

Never consider yourselves as persons that are to be seen, admired, and courted by men, but as poor sinkers, that are to save yourselves from the vanities and follies of a miserable world, by humility, detestation, and self-denial. Lau.

2. An offender; a criminal.

Here's that which is too weak to be a sinker
house's water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire. Shakespeare.

Over the guilty then the fury shakes
The founding whip, and brandishes her snakes.
And the pale sinker with her fangs takes. Dryden.
Further, where sinkers may have rest, I go,
Where flames relin'd in breasts seraphick glow. Pope.

Whether the charmer sinker it or saint it,
It fully grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

SINKOFFERING. n. f. [from sin and offering.]
An expiation or sacrifice for sin.

The flesh of the bullock shalt thou burn without the camp, it is a sinkoffering. Exodus.

the margin, and more sinkuate. Woodward.

SINKUATION. n. f. [from sinuo.] A bending in and out.

The human brain is, in proportion to the body, much larger than the brains of brutes, in proportion to their bodies, and fuller of anfractuities, or sinkuations. Hale.

SINKOSITY. n. f. [from sinuosus.] The quality of being sinuous.

SINUOUS. adj. [from sinu, French; from sinus, Latin.] Bending in and out.

Try with what disadvantage the voice will be carried in an horn, which is a line niched; or in a trumpet, which is a line retorted; or in some pipe that were sinuous. Bacon.

These, as a line, their long dimension drew,
Stretching the ground with sinuous trace. Milton.

In the dissection of bodies, in the concave or sinuous part of the liver, whereat the gall is usually seated in quadrupeds, I discover an hollow, long, membranous substance. Brown.

SINUUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A bay of the sea; an opening of the land.

Plato supposeth his Atlantis to have sunk all into the sea, whether that be true or no, I do not think it impossible that some arms of the sea, or sinkings, might have had such an original. Burnet.

2. Any fold or opening.

To SIP. v. a. [from sippan, Saxon; sippen,
Dutch.]

1. To drink by small draughts; to take, at one apposition of the cup to the mouth, no more than the mouth will contain.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs their elemental tea. Pope.

2. To drink in small quantities.

Find out the peaceful hermitage;
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heaven doth dwell,
And every herb that sips the dew. Milton.

3. To drink out of.

The winged nation o'er the forest flies;
Then sipping on the meads and leafy bow'rs,
They skim the floods, and sip the purple flow'rs. Dryden.

To SIP. v. n. To drink a small quantity.

She sipped it to her mouth with labor grace;
Then sipped again, and to the next. Dryden.

SIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A small draught; as much as the mouth will hold.

Her face o'flow'd
With labour, and the thing she took to quench it
She would to each one sip. Shakespeare.

One sip of this
Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight,
Pe, and the bliss of dreams. Milton.

SIPHON. n. f. [siphon, Apia, Lat. Siphon, French.] A pipe through which liquors are conveyed.

Beneath the incessant weeping of these drains
I see the rocky siphons stretch'd immense,
The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
Of still compacted clay. Thomson

SIPPER. n. f. [from sip.] One that sips.

SIPPET. n. f. [sip, sip, sippit.] A small sop.

SIR. n. f. [sir, French; signior, Italian; senor, Spanish; senior, Latin.]

1. The word of respect in compellation.

Speak on, sir,
I dare your worst objections: if I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners. Shakespeare
But, sir, be sudden in the execution;
Withal obdurate; do not let him plead. Shakespeare
Sir king.

This man is better than the man he slew. Shakespeare
At a banquet the ambassador desired the wife men to deliver every one of them some sentence or parable; that he might report to his king, which they did.
only one was silent, which the ambassador perceiving, said to him, Sir, let it not dispense you; why do not you say somewhat that I may report? He answered, Report to your lord, that there are that can hold their peace. Bacon

2. The title of a knight or baronet. This word was anciently so much held essential, that the Jews in their addresses expressed it in Hebrew characters.

Sir Horace Vere, his brother, was the principal in the active part. Bacon
The court forsakes him, and sir Balaam hangs.
Pope

3. It is sometimes used for man.

I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a false report, which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment,
In the election of a sir for me. Shakespeare

4. A title given to the loin of beef, which one of our kings knighted in a fit of good humour.

He lost his roast-beef stomach, not being able to touch a sir-loin which was served up. Addison

And the strong table groans
Beneath the smould'ring sir-loin, stretch'd immense
From side to side. Thomson

It would be ridiculous, indeed, if a spit, which is strong enough to turn a sir-loin of beef, should not be able to turn a lark. Swift

SIRE. n. f. [sire, French; senior, Latin.]

1. A father. Used in poetry.

He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
And raise his issue like a loving sire. Shakespeare
A virgin is his mother, but his sire
Thy power of the most High. Milton

And now I leave the true and just supports
Of legal princes and of honest courts,
Whole sires, great partners in my father's cares,
Saluted their young king at Hebrew crown'd. Prior
Whether his hourly sire he spies,
Or meets his spouse's fonder eye. Pope

2. It is used in common speech of beasts:
as, the horse had a good sire, but a bad dam.

3. It is used in composition: as, grand*sire*, great grand*sire*.

To SIRE. v. a. To beget; to produce.
Towards father cowards, and base things sire
the base. Shakespeare

SIREN. n. f. [Latin.] A goddess who enticed men by singing, and devoured them; any mischievous alluring woman.

Oh train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy siren's flood of tears:
Sing siren, to thyself, and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shakespeare

SIRIASIS. n. f. [siriasis.] An inflammation of the brain and its meninges, through an excessive heat of the sun.

Diff.

SIRIUS. n. f. [Latin.] The dogstar.

SIROCCO. n. f. [Italian; syrrus ventus, Latin.] The southeast or Syrian wind.

Forth rush the levand and the potent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr, with their lateral noise,
Sirocco and Libeccio. Milton

SIRRAH. n. f. [sir, ha! Minshew.] A compellation of reproach and insult.

Go, sirrah, to my cell;
Take with you your companions: as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely. Shakespeare

Sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, or honesty in this bosom of thine. Shakespeare

It runs in the blood of your whole race, sirrah, to hate our family. Shakespeare

Guests how the goddess greets her son,
Come hither, sirrah; now begone. Prior

SIRUP. n. f. [Arabic.] The juice of vegetables boiled with sugar.

Shall I, whose ears her mournful words did seize,
Her words myn up laid of sweetest breath,
Relent. Sidney

Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy sirups of the world,

Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep,
Which thou owed'st yesterday. Shakespeare

And first, behold this cordial sirup here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds,
With spirits of balm, and fragrant sirups mixt. Milton

Those expressed juices contain the true essential salt of the plant: for if they be boiled into the consistence of a sirup, and set in a cool place, the essential salt of the plant will shoot upon the sides of the vessels. Arbutnot

SIRUPED. adj. [from sirup.] Sweet, like sirup; bedewed with sweets.

Yet when there hangs a honey fall,
We'll lick the sirup leaves:
And tell the bees that there is gall. Drayton

SIRUPY. adj. [from sirup.] Resembling sirup.

Apples are of a sirupy tenacious nature. Mortimer

SIRE. n. f. [contracted from qsis.]

You said, if I return'd next sire in Lent,
I should be in remitter of your grace. Donne

SIRSKIN. n. f. [chloris, Latin.] A bird;
a greenfinch.

SISTER. n. f. [syster, Saxon; zuster,
Dutch.]

1. A woman born of the same parents;
correlative to brother.

Her sister began to scold. Shakespeare
I have said to corruption, thou art my father:
to the worm, thou art my mother and my sister. Joh.

2. Woman of the same faith; a christian;
one of the same nature; human being.

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of food, and you say unto them, Depart in peace, beyond warned and filled; notwithstanding, you give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? James

3. A female of the same kind.
He chid the sisters,
And bade them speak to him. Shakespeare

4. One of the same kind; one of the same condition.

The women, who would rather wrest the laws
Than let a sister-plaintiff lose the cause,
As judges on the bench more gracious are,
And more attent to brothers of the bar,
Cried, one and all, the suppliant should have right;
And to the grandame hag adjudg'd the knight. Dr. den

There grew two olives, close of the grove,
With roots mixt, and branches interwove;
Alike their leaves, but not alike they fruit'd
With sister-fruits: one fertile, one was wild. Pope

SISTER. n. f. A husband or wife's sister.

Thy sister in law is gone back unto her people:
return thou after thy sister in law. Black

SISTERHOOD. n. f. [from sister.]

1. The office or duty of a sister.

She abhorre'd
Her proper blood, and left to do the part Of sisterhood, to do that of a wife. Donne

2. A set of sisters.

3. A number of women of the same order.

I speak
Wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votants of Saint Clare. Shakespeare

A woman who flourishes in her innocence, and that spirit and rancour which prevails among the exasperated sisterhood, appears more amiable. Black

SISTERLY. adj. [from sister.] Like a sister; becoming a sister.

After much debatement,
My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,
And I did yield to him. Shakespeare

To SIT. v. n. preterit I sat. [sitan, Ger.
thick; sittan, Saxon; setten, Dutch]

1. To rest upon the buttocks.

Their wives do sit beside them, carding wool. Mary's Hymn

Aloft, in awful state,
The godlike hero sit
On his imperial throne. Dryden

2. To perch.

All new fashions be pleasant to me,
I will have them whether I thrive or thee;
Now I am a frisker, all men on me look,
What should I do but sit cock on the hoop?
What do I care if all the world me fool,
I will have a garment reach to my tail. Bacon

3. To be in a state of rest, or idleness.

Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here? Numb.

Why sit we here each other viewing idly. Milt

4. To be in any local position.

I should be still
Plucking the grass, to know where sits the wind:
Peering in maps for ports. Shakespeare

Those Appointed to sit there had left their charge. Milt
The ships are ready, and the wind sits fair. A. Philip.

5. To rest as a weight or burden.

Your brother's death sits at your heart. Shakespeare
When God lets loose upon us a sickness, we fear to die, then the calamity sits heavy on us. Isaiah

To toss and sling, and to be restless, only adds our sores, and makes the burden that is upon us more uneasy. Tillotson

Fear, the last ofills, remain'd behind,
And horror heavy sit on every mind. Dryden

Our whole endeavours are intent to get rid of the present evil, as the first necessary condition to our happiness. Nothing, as we passionately think, is equal the uneasiness that sits so heavy upon us. Locke

6. To settle; to abide.

That this new comer, shame,
There sit not and reproach us. Milton

When Thetis bluish'd in purple not her own,
And from her face the breathing winds were blown
A sudden silence sate upon the sea,
And sweeping oars with straggling urg'd their way. Dryden

He to the void advanc'd his pace;
Pale horror sate on each Arcadian face. Dryden

7. To brood; to incubate.

As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches not by right shall leave them in the midst of his days. Jeremiah
The egg laid, and severed from the body of the hen, hath no more nourishment from the hen, but only a quickening heat when the sitteth. Bacon

She mistak's a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it in the same manner. Addison

8. To be adjusted; to be with respect to fitness or unfitness, decorum or indecorum.

This new and gorgeous garment, majesty,
Sits not so easily on me as you think. Shakespeare.

He's 'n' knows
Be who by paths and indirect crook'd ways
Lure the crown; and I myself know well,
How soon I shall defend with better quicke.

Shakespeare.
You preferring that to all other considerations, dash in the eyes of all men, fit well upon you. Locke.

9. To be placed in order to be painted.
Ope is under no more obligation to extol every thing he finds in his author he translates, than a pompier is to make every face that fits to him look fine. Garth.

10. To be in any situation or condition.
A farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he is at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sits at great injury. Bacon.
So, when all the church-lords were thrown up to the bay; would the tenants sit easier in their parsons' houses? Swift.

11. To be convened, as an assembly of a publick or authoritative kind; to hold a session; as, the parliament sits; the last general Council sat at Trent.

12. To be placed at the table.
Whether is greater, he that sits at meat, or he that serveth? Luke.

13. To exercise authority.
The judgment shall sit, and take away his dominion. Daniel.
All as ye that sit in judgment Down to the golden Cherubim, or where The Persian in Babylon sits. Milton.
One council sits upon life and death, the other is in times, and a third for the distributions of justice.
Addison.

14. To be in any solemn assembly as a member.
Alas, ye fair ones, who in judgment sit,
You sit out empire over love and wit. Rowe.

15. To sit down. Down is little more than emphatical.
Go, and sit down to meat. Luke.
When we sit down to our meal, we need not suffer of the murmur of armed uninvited guests.
Ducy of Pictry.

16. To sit down. To begin a siege.
Nor a add the enemy have sit down before it,
they had done their business in all other places.
Clarendon.

17. To sit down. To rest; to cease as tired.
Here we cannot sit down, but still proceed in our march, and look higher for a support. Rogers.

18. To sit down. To settle; to fix oneself.
The fishes Tuna, the Gull, the Herring, and Gilt
Have regular'd upon our brazen banks;
And then grace us in the distance of death.
When, spite of common devouring time,
The endeavour of this perfect beauty may buy
That honour, which shall state his fight's keen edge. Shakespeare.

19. To sit out. To be without engagement or employment.
The great god, rather than sit out, to play very offensive, and to make use of arguments, such as shall prove a bare expediency. Sp. Sander.

20. To sit up. To rise from lying to sleep.
That was dead, sat up, and began to speak. Luke.

21. To sit up. To watch; not to go to bed.
Be closely,
And cut down, and seat, sit up, and revel;
Of the great, the fair, and spotted dames
From about thee, and begin a fashion
Of the same. Ben Jonson.

22. To sit up. To watch; not to go to
bed.
The children shorten that time by sitting up
with company at night. Locke.

23. To sit up. To watch; not to go to
bed.
The children shorten that time by sitting up
with company at night. Locke.

24. To sit up. To watch; not to go to
bed.
The children shorten that time by sitting up
with company at night. Locke.

25. To sit up. To watch; not to go to
bed.
The children shorten that time by sitting up
with company at night. Locke.

26. To sit up. To watch; not to go to
bed.
The children shorten that time by sitting up
with company at night. Locke.

27. To sit up. To watch; not to go to
bed.
The children shorten that time by sitting up
with company at night. Locke.

28. To sit up. To watch; not to go to
bed.
The children shorten that time by sitting up
with company at night. Locke.

29. To sit up. To watch; not to go to
bed.
The children shorten that time by sitting up
with company at night. Locke.

To SIT. v. a.

1. To keep the seat upon.
Hardly the mule can sit the head strong horse,
Nor would she, if she could, check his impetuous force. Prior.

2. [When the reciprocal pronoun follows sit, it seems to be an active verb.] To place on a seat.
The happiest youth viewing his progress through
What perils past, what crosses to endure,
Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.

3. To be settled to do business. This is rather neuter.

No incident in the piece or play but must carry on the main design; all things else are like fig-leaves to the land, when nature can do her work with five.

That of fig hath many respects in it, not only for the days of the creation, but its natural conformation, as being a perfect number.

SIX and seven, n. f. To be at fix and seven, is to be in a state of disorder and confusion. A ludicrous expression that has been long in use.

All is uneven,
And every thing is left at fix and seven. Shakespeare.
In 1588 there was in the sea of Rome a fierce thundering storm, that would not all at fix and seven, or at fix and five, if you allude to his name. Bacon.

What blunder bargain ere was driv'n,
Or wagger laid at fix and seven. Wright.

John once turned his mother out of doors, to his great sorrow; for his affairs went on at fix and seven.

The goddess would no longer wait
But, rising from her chair of state,
Lest all below at fix and seven,
Himself'd her doves, and flew to heaven. Swift.

SIXPENCE, n. f. [fix and pence.] A coin; half a shilling.

Where have you left the money that I gave you?
Ob!—sixpence that I had. Shakespeare.

The wisest man might blunder,
If D—lov'd sixpence more than hob. Pope.

SIXSCORE, adj. [six and score.] Six times twenty.

Sixscore and five miles it containeth in circuit.

The crown of Spain hath enlarged the bounds thereof within this last sixscore years, much more than the Ottomans. Bacon.

SIXTEEN, n. f. [sixtyne, Saxon.] Six and ten.

It returned the voice thirteen times; and I have heard of others that it would utter sixteen times. Bacon.

If men lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about sixteen or eighteen. Taylor.

SIXTEENTH, adj. [sixteend, Saxon.] The sixth after the tenth; the ordinal of sixteen.

The first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, the sixteenth to Immer. 1 Chronicles.

SIXTH, adj. [sixta, Saxon.] The first after the fifth; the ordinal of six.

You are more clement than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take
A sixth, letting them thrive again. Shakespeare.

There succeeded to the kingdom of England James the sixth, then king of Scotland. Bacon.

SIXTH, n. f. [from the adjective.] A sixth part.

Only the other half would have been a tolerable feast for rational creatures, and five sixths of the whole globe would have been rendered useless.

SIXTHLY, adv. [from six.] In the sixth place.

Sixthly, living creatures have more diversity of organs than plants. Bacon.

SIXTIETH, adj. [sixteig, Saxon.] The tenth six times repeated; the ordinal of sixty.

Let the appearing circle of the fire be three feet diameter, and the time of one entire circulation of it the sixtieth part of a minute, in a whole day there will be but 86,400 such parts. Digby.

SIXTY, adj. [sixteig, Saxon.] Six times ten.

When the boats were come within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, and could gain no farther. Bacon.

Of which 7 times 9, or the year 63, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality.

SIZE, n. f. [perhaps rather cise, from incisu, Lat. or from ajise, Fr.]

1. Bulk; quantity of superficies; comparative magnitude.

I ever verified my friends,
With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer.

If any decay'd ship be new made, it is more fit to make her size less than bigger.

The distance just'd for shot of every size,
The instocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires.

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote.

The martial goddess,
Like thee, Telemachus, in voice and size,
With speed divine, from street to street she flies.

2. [ajise, old Fr.] A settled quantity. In the following passage it seems to signify the allowance of the table: whence they say a size at Cambridge.

'Tis not in thee
To cut off my train, to scant my size.
And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt Against my coming in.

3. Figurative bulk; condition.

This agrees too in the contempt of men of a less size and quality.

They do not consider the difference between elaborate discourses, delivered to princes or parliaments, and a plain sermon, for the middling or lower size of people.

4. [isiz, Italian.] Any viscous or glutinous substance.

To SIZE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adjust or arrange according to size.
The foxes weigh the geese they carry.
And, ere they venture on a stream,
Know how to size themselves and them.

Two troops to match'd were never to be found,
Such bodies built for strength, of equal age,
In stature fix'd.

2. [from ajise.] To settle; to fix.

There was a statute for disordering the standard of the exchequer throughout England; thereby to size weights and measures.

3. To cover with glutinous matter; to be linear with size.

SIZE'D, adj. [from size.] Having a particular magnitude.

What my love is, proof hath made you know;
And as my love is fix'd, my fear is so.

That will be a great horse to a Welshman, which is but a small one to a Fleming; having, from the different breed of their countries, taken several fix'd ideas, to which they compare their great and their little.

SIZEABLE, adj. [from size.] Reasonably bulky; of just proportion to others.

He should be purged, twented, and size'd, and size'd, till he come to a sizeable bulk.

SIZE'N or SERVITOR, n. f. A certain rank of students in the universities.

They make a scramble for degree:
Masters of all sorts and of all ages,
Keepers, scribes, lackeys, pages.

SIZE'RS, n. f. See SCISSARS.

A buttrice and pincers, a hammer and malle.
An apron and size for head and for tale.

SIZE'NESS, n. f. [from size.] Glutinousness; viscosity.

In rheumatism, the size passes off thick contents in the urine, or glutinous sweat.

Cold is capable of producing a size and viscosity in the blood.

SIZE'Y, adj. [from size.] Viscous; glutinous.

The blood is sizey, the alkalescent salts in the serum producing concrete concretions.

SKA'DULE, n. f. [scendhulle, Saxon. scath is harm; thence scathle, scaddle.] Hurt; damage.

SKA'DONS, n. f. The embryos of bees.

SKA'NNATE, n. f. [I suppose from skan, or scan, a knife, and mate.] A mediate. It is remarkable that scan, Dutch, is a knife.

Scurvy knave, I am none of his dirt gills;
I am none of his skannates.

SKATE, n. f. [scubba, Saxon.]

1. A flat sea fish.

2. A sort of shoe armed with iron, for sliding on the ice.

On sounding skates a thousand different ways,
In circling poise swift as the wind.

SKEAN, n. f. [Irish and Erse; ragene, Saxon.] A short sword; a knife.

Any disposed to do mischief may under his mantle privily carry his head piece, skan, or pistol, to be always ready.

The Irish did not fail in courage or fierceness, being only armed with darts and skenes, it was rather an execution than a fight upon them.

SKEG, n. f. A wild plum.

SKEGGER, n. f.

Little salmon, called skeggars, are bred of such sick salmon that might not go to the sea; and though they abound, yet never thrive to any degree.

SKEIN, n. f. [escaigne, Fr.] A knot of thread or silk wound and doubled.

Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skain of fly'd silk, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse?

Our file should be like a skain of silk, to be bound by the right thread, not unravelled or perplexed.

Besides, so lax a brain as mine is, grows soon weary when it has to be entangled a skain as this to unwind.

SKELETON, n. f. [σκαλετος.]

1. [In anatomy.] The bones of the body preserved together as much as can be in their natural situation.

When rattling bones together fly,
From the four corners of the sky,
When skews o'er the skeletons are spread,
Those cloth'd with flesh, and life inspires the dead.

Though the patient may from other causes be exceedingly emaciated, and appear as a ghastly skeleton, covered only with a dry skin, yet nothing but the ruin and destruction of the lungs denotes a consumption.

I thought to meet, as late as heav'n might grant,
A skeleton, ferocious, tall, and gaunt,
Whose loose teeth in their naked sockets shook,
And grinn'd terrific, a Sardinian look.

2. The compages of the principal parts.

The great structure itself, and its great integuments, the heavenly and elementary bodies, are bound in such a position and situation, the great skels of the world.

The skemes of any of the arts or sciences may be analyzed in a sort of skeleton, and represented upon tables, with the various dependencies of the several parts.

SKELLUM, n. f. [skelm, German.] A villain; a scoundrel.

SKEP, n. f. [scpehu, lower Saxon, to draw.]

1. A sort of basket, narrow at the bottom, and wide at the top, to fetch corn in.

A pitchfork, a doongfork, skewer, skerp, and a skerp.

2. In Scotland, the repositories where the bees lay their honey is still called skerp.

SKE'PRICK, n. f. [scapwick; septicus, Fr.] One who doubts, or pretends to doubt, of every thing.

Bring the cause unto the bar; whose authority none must disclaim, and least of all those skerp in religion.

Nature's extended face, then septicus lay.

Dark wide field of wonders say you find
No art?

With too much knowledge, for the sceptic's side,
 With too much weakness for the stoic's pride,
 Men hang between.

The dogmatist is sure of every thing, and the sceptick believes nothing.

SKEPTICAL. adj. [from skeptick.] Doubtful; pretending to universal doubt.

May the Father of mercies confirm the sceptical and wavering minds, and so prevent us, that stand fast, in all our doings, and further us with his constant help.

SKEPTICISM. n. s. [Scepticisme, French; from skeptick.] Universal doubt; pretence or profession of universal doubt.

I had by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatick way.

SKETCH. n. s. [schedula, Lat.] An outline; a rough draught; a first plan.

I shall not attempt a character of his present majesty, having already given an imperfect sketch of it.

As the lightest sketch, if justly trac'd,
 Is by all colouring but the more disgrac'd,
 So by false learning is good sense defac'd.

TO SKETCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To draw, by tracing the outline.

If a picture is daubed with many glaring colours, the vulgar eye admires it; whereas he judges very contemptuously of some admirable design sketched out only with a black pencil, though by the hand of Raphael.

TO PLAN. v. n. [from the noun.] To plan, by giving the first or principal notion.

The reader I'll leave in the midst of silence, to contemplate those ideas which I have only sketch- ed, and which every man must finish for himself.

SKEWER. n. s. [kere, Danish.] A wooden or iron pin, used to keep meat in form.

Sweethearts and collops were with skewers prick'd
 About the sides.

I once may overlook
 A skewer sent to table by a cook.

From his rag the skewer he takes,
 And on the thick ten equal notches makes.

Send up meat well skewer'd with skewers, to make it look round; and an iron skewer, when rightly employed, will make it look handsome.

TO SKEWER. v. a. [from the noun.] To strew with skewers.

SKIFF. n. s. [skiffe, Fr. scapha, Latin.]
 A small light boat.

In two skiffs of cork a loadstone and steel be placed within the orb of their activities, the cloth or move, the other standing still; but both skiff into each other.

In a poor skiff he pass'd the bloody main,
 Chok'd with the slaughter'd bodies of his train.

On Garrway cliffs
 A savage race, by shipwreck fed,

Are waiting for the founder'd skiff,
 And strip the bodies of the dead.

SKILLFUL. adj. [from skill and full.] Knowing;
 qualified with skill; possessing any art;
 dexterous; able. It is, in the following examples, used with of, at, and in, before the subject of skill. Of seems poetical, of ludicrous, in popular and proper.

His father was a man of Tyre, skillful to work in gold and silver.

They shall call the husbandmen to mourning, and such as are skillful of lamentation, to wailing.

Will Vicer be skillful at finding out the ridiculous about a thing, and placing it in a new light.

Say, Stella, feel you no content;
 Rinsing on a life well spent;

For skillful hand employ'd to save Suffering wretches from the grave;

And then supporting with your store
 Those whom you drag'd from death before.

He intending not to make a summer business of it, but a resolute war, without term prefixed, until he had recovered France, it skilled not much when he began the war, especially having Calais at his back where he might winter.

SKILLED. adj. [from skill.] Knowing;
 dexterous; acquainted with; with of poetically, with in popularly.

Of these nor skill'd nor studious.
 Notes in all the Egyptian arts was skill'd.

When heavenly power that chosen vessel skill'd.
 He must be very little skilled in the world, who thinks that a voluble tongue shall accompany only a good understanding.

SKILLLESS. adj. [from skill.] Wanting skill; artless. Not in use.

Nor have I been
 More that I may call men than you.

How skillless are all our skillful of.

As soon as he came near me, in the distance, with much fury, but with fury skillfully guided, he was upon me.

Ulysses builds a ship with his own hands, as skillfully as a shipwright.

SKILLFULNESS. n. s. [from skillful.] Art;
 ability; dexterity.

He fed them according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skillfulness of his hands.

SKILL. n. s. [skil, Islandick.]
 1. Knowledge of any practice or art; readiness in any practice; knowledge;
 dexterity; artfulness.

Skill in the weapon is nothing without sack.
 You have
 As little skill to fear, as I have purpose
 To put you to't.

Or nothing profits more Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right.
 Well manag'd; of that skill the more thou know'st,
 The more she will acknowledge thee her head.

I will from wondrous principles obtain
 A race unlike the first, and try my skill again.

Phocion the Athenian general, then ambassador from the state, by his great wisdom and skill at negotiations, diverted Alexander from the conquest of Athens, and restored the Athenians to his favour.

Any particular art.
 Learned in one skill, and in another kind of learning unskillful.

Instructors should not only be skillful in those sciences which they teach; but have skill in the method of teaching, and patience in the practice.

SKILLFULLY. adv. [from skillful.] With skill; with art; with uncommon ability;
 dexterously.

As soon as he came near me, in the distance, with much fury, but with fury skillfully guided, he was upon me.

Ulysses builds a ship with his own hands, as
skillfully as a shipwright.

SKILLFULNESS. n. s. [from skillful.] Art;
 ability; dexterity.

He fed them according to the integrity of his

 of Athens, and restored the Athenians to his favour.

Any particular art.
 Learned in one skill, and in another kind of
 learning unskillful.

TO SKILL. v. n. [skilia, Islandick.]
 1. To be knowing in; to be dexterous at;
 with of.

They that skill not of so heavenly matter,
 All that they know not, envy or admire.

The overseers were all that could skill of instruments of music.

One man of wisdom, experience, learning, and direction, may judge better in those things that he can skill of; than ten thousand others that be ignorant.

2. [skilia, Islandick, signifies to distinguish.] To differ; to make difference;
 to interest; to matter. Not in use.

Whether the commandments of God in scripture be general or special, it skilleth not.

What skilleth it, if a bag of stones or gold about thy neck do drown thee; raise thy head, Take stars for money; stars not to be told
 By any art; yet to be purchas'd.

None is so wasteful as the scrapping dame;
 She loseth three for one; her soul, roll, fame.

He intending not to make a summer business of
 it, but a resolute war, without term prefixed, until
 he had recovered France, it skilled not much when he began the war, especially having Calais at his back where he might winter.

SKILLED. adj. [from skill.] Knowing;

SKILLLESS. adj. [from skill.] Wanting
 skill; artless. Not in use.

Nor have I been
 More that I may call men than you.

How skillless are all our skillful of.

Jealously what might hold your travel,
 Being skilled in their parts, which to a stranger, Unguided and untried, often prove Rough and unprofitable.

They was that ornate to shape and love,
 Multitude in the conduct of them both,
 Like powder in a skilled soldier's tank
 Is set on fire.

SKILLET. n. s. [esculette, Fr.] A small kettle or boiler.

When light wind'd toys
 Of feather'd Cupid sail with wanton dullness
 My speculative and oft'd instruments,
 Let house-wives make a skillet of my helm,

And all midday and bale advices
 Make head against my estimation.

Break all the wax, and in a skillet set it over a soft fire.

SKILT. n. s. [a word used by Chaucer, of which I know not either the etymology or meaning.]

Shew me, I ha' what art?
 Syriack? or Arabick? or Welsh? What skilt?
 Ape all the bracklayers that Babel built.

TO SKIM. v. a. [properly to scum, from
scum; escume, French.]

1. To clear off from the upper part, by passing a vessel a little below the surface.

My cow Tom, or his cow Mary,
 Who hold the plough or skim the dairy,
 My favorite books and pictures tell.

2. To take by skimming.

She tolls in kettles mull of wine, and skims
 With leaves the dregs that overflow the brims.

His principal studies were after the works of Titian, whose cream he has skimmed.

The surface of the sea is covered with its bubbles, while it rises, which they skim off into their boats, and afterwards separate in pots.

Whilome I've seen her skim the clotted cream,
 And press from spongy curds the milky stream.

3. To brush the surface slightly; to pass very near the surface.

Nor looks an air her humble flight to raise,
 Content to skim the surface of the seas.

The swallow skims the river's wat'ry face.

A winged eastern blast just skimming o'er
 The ocean's brow, and sinking on the shore.

4. To cover superficially. Improper.

Perhaps originally skin.
 Dangle thus in secret ambush lay,
 Where the false tales skim o'er the cover'd
 land.

And seamen with dissembled depths betray.

TO SKIM. v. n. To pass lightly; to glide along.

Thin airy shapes o'er the furrows rise,
 A dreadful scene! and skim before his eyes.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,

The line too labours, and the words move slow;
 Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain, Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main.

Such as have active spirits, who are ever skimming
 over the surface of things with a volatile spirit, will be nothing in their memory.

They skim over a science in a very superficial survey, and never lead their disciples into the depths of it.

SKIMBLESKAMBLE. adj. [a cant word formed by reduplication from scamble.]
 Wandering; wild.

A couching lion and a ramping cat,
 And such a deal of skamble stuff,
 As puts me from my path.

SKIMMER. n. s. [from skim.] A shallow vessel with which the cream is taken off.

With your wheat in three or four waters, skim- ring it round; and with a skimmer, each time, take off the light.

SKIMMERS. n. s. [skim and milks.] Milk from which the cream has been taken.

Then cheeks was brought; Physiognomy, this skin shall roll;

This is skin, and therefore it shall go. King
SKIN, n. f. [kind, Danish.]

1. The natural covering of the flesh. It consists of the cuticle, outward skin, or *sear*skin, which is thin and insensible; and the cutis, or inner skin, extremely sensible.

The body is confined to nothing, the skin feeling rough and dry like leather.

The priest of skins of offerings takes his ease,
And majesty shines in his flamber fees. Dryden.

2. Hide; pelt; that which is taken from animals to make parchment or leather.

On which top he throw'd

A wilde goat's thaggy skin; and then he bow'd
His own couch on it. Shakespeare.

3. The body; the person: in ludicrous speech.

We meet with many of these dangerous civilities, wherein 'tis hard for a man to save both his skin
and his credit. L'Estrange.

4. A hulk.

To SKIN, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To flay; to strip or divest of the skin.

The beavers run to the door to make their escape, are there entangled in the nets, seized by the Indians, and immediately skinned. Edwards.

2. To cover with the skin.

It will lute skin and fill the ulcerous place,
Which smelt corruption, warming all within,
Insects unseen. Shakespeare.

Authority, though it eat like others,
Has yet a kind of medicine in itself,
That skins the vice of the top. Shakespeare.

The wound was skinned; but the strength of his quigh was not restored. Dryden.

It only patches up and skins it over, but reaches not to the bottom of the sore. Locke.

The last stage of healing, or skinning over, is called an artization. Sharp.

3. To cover superficially.

What a look for total earth was only heaps of rubbish, skinned over with a covering of vegetables.
Addison.

SKINFLINT, n. f. [skin and flint.] A negligently person.

SKINK, n. f. [reenc, Saxon.]

1. Drink; any thing potable.

2. Pottage.

Scotch skink, which is a pottage of strong nourishment, made with the knees and sinews of beef,
but long boiled: jelly also of knuckles of veal.
Bacon.

To SKINK, v. n. [reencan, Saxon.]

To serve drink. Both noun and verb are wholly obsolete.

SKINKER, n. f. [from skink.] One that serves drink.

Give thee this penny worth of sugar, clapt even now into my hand by an under skinker, one that never spoke other English in his life, than eight shillings and six-pence, and you are welcome, Sir.
Shakespeare.

Hang us all the poor hop-drinkers,

Cries old Sym, the king of skinkers. Ben Jonson.

His mother took the cup the clown had hid;
The reconciler bowl went round the board,
Which, emptied, the rude skinker still retord.

Dryden.

SKINNED, adj. [from skin.] Having skin.

When the ulcer becomes foul, and discharges a muddy ichor, the edges in process of time tuck up, and, growing skinned and hard, give it the name of cannon. Sharp.

SKINNER, n. f. [from skin.] A dealer in skins, or pelts.

SKINNINESS, n. f. [from skinny.] The quality of being skinny.

SKINSY, adj. [from skin.] Consisting only of skin; wanting flesh.

Her choppy finger laying

Upon her skinny lips. Shakespeare.

Let the apertures of these cartilages of the windpipe should hurt the gullet, which is tender, and of a skinny substance, these annular gristles are not made round; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way. Ray.

His fingers meet

In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.

To SKIP, v. n. [squittire, Italian; esquiver, Fr. I know not whether it may not come, as a diminutive, from scape.]

1. To fetch quick bounds; to pounce by quick leaps; to bound lightly and joyfully.

Was not Israel a derision unto thee? Was he found among thieves? For, since thou spakst of him, thou skippedst for joy. Jeremiah.

The queen, bound with love's powerful 't charin,
Saw with Pigeon arm in arm;

Her merry maid, that thought no harm,
About the robin were skipping. Drayton.

At four or fanch no more he skipt,
Or mended puce, then Spaniard whipt. Hudibras.

The earth-born race
O'er every hill and verdant pasture stray,
Skip o'er the law, and by the rivers play. Blackm.

John skipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, peeping into every cranny. Abath.

Thus each hand promotes the pleasing pain,
And quick sensations skip from vein to vein. Pope.

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day;
Had he thy reason would he skip and play? Pope.

2. To SKIP over. To pats without notice.

Pope Plus II. was wont to say, that the former popes did wisely to let the lawyers at-work to debate, whether the donation of Constantine to the Great to Sylvester of St. Peter's patrimony were good or valid in law or no; the better to skip over the matter in fact, whether there was ever any such thing at all or no. Bacon.

A gentleman made it a rule, in reading, to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. Swift.

To SKIP, v. a. [esquiver, French.]

1. To miss; to pals.

Let not thy sword skip one;
Pity noth'ng d'age for his white beard;
He is an utterer. Shakespeare.

They who have a mind to see the issue, may skip these two chapters, and proceed to the following.
Burnet.

2. In the following example skip is active or neuter, as over is thought an adverb or preposition.

Although to engage very far in such a metaphysical speculation were unfit, when I only endeavour to expatiate fluidly, yet we dare not quite skip it over, lest we be accused of overlooking it. Boyle.

SKIP, n. f. [from the verb.] A light leap or bound.

He looked very curiously upon himself, sometimes fetching a little skip, as it he had said his strength had not yet forfaken him. Sidney.

You will make to large a skip as to cast yourself from the land into the water. Mère.

SKIPJACK, n. f. [skip and jack.] An upstart.

The want of shame or brains does not presently entitle every little skipjack to the board's end in the cabinet. L'Estrange.

SKIPPENNEL, n. f. [skip and kennel.] A lackey; a footboy.

SKIPPER, n. f. [schipper, Dutch.] A shipmaster or shipboy.

Are not you afraid of being drowned too? No, not I, says the skipper. L'Estrange.

No doubt you will return very much improved.
—Yes, returned like a Dutch skipper from a whole tilting. Congreve.

SKIPPERIT, n. f. [probably from skip.] A small boat. Not used.

Up to the bank they skipper did espy
A dainty damsel, dressing of her hair,
By whom a little skipper floating did appear. F. Qu.

SKIRMISH, n. f. [from go and carra, Welsh, the shout of war; whence, sgarm, and sgarmes, old British words. Moss saw sgarmes a war, says an ancient writer, Esformache, French.]

1. A slight fight; less than a set battle.

One battle, yes, a skirmish more there was
With adverse fortune fought by Cartmound;
Her subjects most revolt. Philips.

2. A contest; a contention.

There is a kind of merry war betwixt skirmish Benedick and her: they never meet but there is a skirmish of wit. Shakespeare.

These skirmishes expire not with the first pro-pugnacity of the opinions: they perhaps become single duellers; but then they soon have their partisans and abettors, who not only enhance, but entail the feud to posterity. Deacon.

To SKIRMISH, v. n. [esformachir, Fr. from the noun.] To fight loosely; to fight in parties before or after the close of the main battle.

Ready to charge, and to retire at will;
Though broken, scatter'd, fled, they skirmish still. Lupton.

A gentleman volunteer, skirmishing with the enemy before Worcester, was run through his arm in the middle of the biceps with a sword, and hit with a musket-bullet in the same shoulder. Johnson.

I'll pass by the little skirmishes on either side.

SKIRMISHER, n. f. [from skirmish.] He who skirmishes. Johnson.

To SKIRRE, v. a. [This word seems to be derived from scir, Saxon, pure, clean; unless it shall be rather deduced from scirra.] To scour; to ramble over in order to clear.

Send out more horses, skirre the country round,
Hunt those that talk of fear. Shakespeare.

To SKIRRE, v. n. To scour; to frud, to run in haste.

We'll make them skirre away as fast as fumes
Enticed from the old Abyssinian line. Shakespeare.

SKIRRET, n. f. [skirum, Lat.] A plant.

Skirrets are a sort of roots propagated by seed.

SKIRTE, n. f. [skorte, Swedish.]

1. The loose edge of a garment; that part which hangs loose below the waist.

It's but a nightgown in respect of yours, clothed gold and ours, side sleeves and parts, round in borne with a bluish tinsel. Shakespeare.

As Samuel turned about to go away, he laid upon the skirt of his mantle and it rent. 1 Samuel.

2. The edge of any part of the dress.

A narrow lace, or a small part of ruffled linen, which runs along the upper part of the waist, before, and crosses the breast, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Johnson.

3. Edge; margin; border; extreme part.

He should seat himself at Athos, upon the
of that unquiet country. Spenser.

Ye muses, that rise
From hill or meandering lake, dusky or grey,
Till the sun paint your fleecy skirts wet gold.

In honour to the world's great Author sit, Johnson.

Though I fled him angry, yet I call'd
To life prolong'd, and proud'st race, I love
Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts.

Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Johnson.

The northern skirts that join to Syria have entered into the conquests or commerce of the great empires; but that which seems to have secured the other, the strong and sandy skirts through which no army can pass. Taylor.

Upon the skirts
Of Arragon our squire's troops he rallies Johnson.

To SKIRT, v. a. [from the noun.] To border; to run along the edge.

Temple skirteth this hundred on the waste Johnson.

Of all these bounds,
With shadowy forests and with clumpage Johnson.

With phœbean rivers and wide skirted meads,
We make thee lady. Shakespeare.

The middle pair
Sunk his loins and thighs with downy gold. Milton.

A spacious circuit on the hill there stood,
Level and wide, and skirted round with wood. Addison.

Dark cypress on the skirting sides adorn'd,
And gloomy cugh tices, which for ever mourn'd. Harte.

MITTISH. adj. [kyc, Danish; schew, Dutch.]

1. Shy; easily frightened.
A reitiff mittish jade had gotten a trick of rife;
e.g. flitting, and flying out at her own shadow. L'Estrange.

2. Warton, volatile; hasty; precipitate.
New expectations, tuckling mittish lip, and Scent on hazard. Shakespeare.

He will relolv'd, to mend the matter,
I follow and cleave the obdurate;
And, till the mittish and looser
Her necks, appear'd to fit the closer. Hudibras.

3. Changeable; fickle.
Some men creep in mittish fortune's hall,
With others play the deits in her eyes. Shaksp.

Such as I am, all true lovers are;
I don't and mittish in all nouns else,
I am the constant image of the creature
But is below'd. Shakespeare.

SKITTISHLY. adv. [from skittish] Wantonly; uncertainly; ficklely.

SKITTISHNESS. n. f. [from skittish] Wantonness; fickleness.

KOSCI. n. f. [See SCORER]

Reynold tucketh every corner of his wily hook, and bestruteth the utmost of his nimble arms to quit his coat from their jaws. Crow.

KREIN. n. f. [geran, gercin, French, which Minghe derives from german, Latin. Nimis valenter, ut follet, Is Sannier; which may be true as to one of the senses; but if the first sense of green be a kind of coarse fibre or riddle, it may perhaps come, if not from creum, from some of the descendants of creno.]

A riddle or coarse sieve.
A kittle or green to rid foil fro' the corn. Tyler.

Any thing by which the sun or weather is kept off.

To cheapen fans, or buy a green. Prior.

So long condemn'd to fires and greens,
You need the waving of these greens. Amos.

Shelter; concealment.
Fond from day by night's eternal green,
Unknown to heav'n, and to my left un-ten. Dryden.

SKREIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To riddle; to sift. A term yet used among matous when they sift land for moitir.

2. To shade from sun or light, or weather.

3. To keep off light or weather.
For curtains closely drawn, the light to green;
This cover'd with an artificial night, Dryden.

4. To shelter; to protect.
The waters mounted up into the air: the interposition between the earth and the sun green and face of the heat, otherwise insupportable. Woodward.

His sevenfold shield, and green'd Lacertes son,
When the insulting Trojans urg'd him fore. Philips.

He that travels with them is to green them, and get them out when they have run themselves into the horns. Locke.

His majesty encouraged his subjects to make moaths at their betters, and afterwards green'd them from punishment. Spectator.

The scales, of which the fear-skin is composed, are designed to fence the orifices of the secretory ducts of the military glands, and to screen the nerves from external injuries. Cheyne.

SKUE. adj. [Of this word there is found no satisfactory derivation.] Oblique; tidelong. It is most used in the adverb askue.

Several have imagined that this skue posture of the axis is a most unfortunate thing; and that if the poles had been erect to the plane of the ecliptick, all mankind would have enjoyed a very paradise. Beauleg.

To SKULK. v. n. To hide; to lurk in fear or malice.

Discovered, and defeated of your prey.
You skulk'd behind the fence, and leas'd away. Dryden.

While publick good aloft in pomp they wield,
And private interest skulk behind the shield. Young.

SKULL. n. f. [skiola, Islandick; skalli, Islandick, a head.]

1. The bone that enloses the head: it is made up of several pieces, which, being joined together, form a considerable cavity, which contains the brain as in a box, and it is proportionate to the bigness of the brain. Quincy.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in form of eyes, reflecting gons. Shaksp.

With redoubled strokes he plies his head;
But drives the butter'd skull within the brains. Dryden.

2. [people, Saxon, a company.] A thoul.

See SCULL.

SKULLCAP. n. f. A headpiece.

SKULLCAP. n. f. [capilla, Lat.] A plant.

SKY. n. f. [ky, Danish.]

1. The region which surrounds this earth beyond the atmosphere. It is taken for the whole region without the earth.

The mountains their broad backs upheave
Into the clouds, their tops attend the sky. Milton.

The maids of Argos, who with frantic cries,
And imitated howlings, fill'd the sky. Beaumont.

Raise all thy winds, with night involve the sky. Dryden.

2. The heavens.

The thunderer's bolt, you know,
Sky plants'd, butters all rebellious comets. Shaksp.

What is this knowledge but the sky's toll'n fire,
For which the thief still chan'd in ice doth lie? Dante.

Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high,
With adamantine columns threats the sky. Dryden.

3. The weather; the climate.

Then wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the sky. Shakespeare.

We envy not the warmer clime, that lies
In ten degrees of more indulgent heat;
Nor at the extremes of our heav'n's regions,
Though o'er our heads the frozen Pleiads thine. Addison.

SKY'Y. adj. [from ky. Not very elegantly formed.] Ethereal.

A breath the art,
Serve to tell the sky's nobleness,
That do this habitation, where thou keep'st, Happily adit. Shakespeare.

SKY'COLOUR. n. f. [ky and colour.] An azure colour; the colour of the sky.

A solution as clear as water, with only a light touch of sky-colour, but nothing near so high as the celestial structure of silver. Boyle.

SKY'COLOURED. adj. [ky and colour.] Blue; azure like the sky.

Thus your Ovid himself has hinted, when he tells us that the blue water-nymphs are dressed in sky-coloured garments. Addison.

SKY'COLORED. adj. [Ay and dis.] Coloured like the sky.

There's a sky-coloured, a purple hue discolors. Pope.

SKY'ED. adj. [from ky.] Enveloped by the skies. This is unauthorized and inelegant.

The pale deluge floats
O'er the sky'd mountain to the shadowy vale. Thomson.

SKY'ISH. adj. [from ky.] Coloured by the ether; approaching the sky.

Of this that a mountain you have made,
T' o'erstop old Pithon, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare.

SKY LARK. n. f. [ky and lark.] A lark that mounts and sings.

He next proceeded to the sky, mounting up by a sky scale of notes, and afterwards falling down with a very easy descent. Spectator.

SKY'LIGHT. n. f. [ky and light.] A window placed in a room, not laterally, but in the ceiling.

A monstrous fowl dropped through the sky-light, near his wife's apartment. Abbot and Pope.

SKY'ROCKET. n. f. [ky and rocket.] A kind of firework, which flies high, and burns as it flies.

I co. sidered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a sky-rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Addison.

SL. n. f.

1. A puddle. Anticorinth.

2. A plane of stone; as, a marble slab.

SLAB. adj. [*a word, I suppose, of the same original with slacker, or *slacer.] Thick; viscous; glutinous.

Nate of Turk, and Lactar's ship;
Finger of butch-franz, led babe,
Duch-delivered by a crab;
Make the great thick and slab. Shakespeare.

To SLABBER. v. n. [slabben, slabben, Dutch.]

1. To let the spittle fall from the mouth; to drivel.

2. To shed or pour any thing.

To SLABBER. v. a. [Slaver is the word used.]

He slabber'd me all over, from cheek to cheek, with his great tongue. Butcher.

2. To shed, to spill.
The milk pua and cream pot to slabber'd and toff,
That butter is wanting, and heele is half bit. Tyler.

SLABBERER. n. f. [from slabber.] He who slabbets; an idiot.

SLABBY. adj. [the same with slab.]

1. Thick; viscous. Not used.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist hot mooring,
slabby and greasy medicaments are to be used,
and drying to be us'd. Wegman.

2. Wet; doody: in low language.

When waggish boys the fluted bottom ply,
To rid the slabby pavements, pass not by. Gay.

SLACK. adj. [place, Saxon; slaken, Islandick; ylack, Welsh; lacas, Latin.]

1. Not tense; not hard drawn; loose.

The vein in the arm is that which is loose; commonly open, and he gives a particular name to this case, to make a slack compulsion. For fear of exciting a convulsion. Booth.

2. Relaxed; weak; not holding fast.
Ad his joints relax'd;
From his slack hand the garland wreath'd for Eve
Down dropp'd, and all the faded roses shed. Milton.

3. Remiss; not diligent; not eager; not fervent.
Thus much help and furtherance is more yielded, in that, if to be our zeal and devotion to God will be slack, the alacrity and fervour of others serveth as a present cure. Hooder.

Seeing his soldiers slack and timorous, he re-proved them of cowardice and treason. Knollys.
Nor were it just, would he refuse that slack.
That slack duration should his thunder scape.
Waller.

Rebellion now began, for lack
Of zeal and plunder, to grow slack. Hudibras.

4. Not violent; not rapid.
Their pace was formal, grave, and slack:
His nimble wit outran the heavy pack. Dryden.

5. Not intense.
A handful of slack dried hops spoil many pounds, by taking away their pleasant smell. Mortimer.

To SLACK. } v. n. [from the adjective.]
To SLACKEN. }

1. To be remiss; to neglect.
When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord,
slack not to pay it. Deuteronomy.

2. To lose the power of cohesion.
The fire, in haste burnt, lies lid, so that it appears to be cold; but water excites it again, whereby it slacks and crumbles into fine powder. Mozon.

3. To abate.
Whence these raging fires
Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames.
Milton.

4. To languish; to fail; to flag.
To SLACK. } v. a.
To SLACKEN. }

1. To loosen; to make less tight.
Ah! generous youth, that with forbear;
Slack all thy fails, and fear to come. Dryden.
Had Ajax been employ'd, our slacken'd fails
Had still at Aulis waited happy gales. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit.
This makes the pullex beat, and lungs respire;
This holds the sinews like a bridle's rein;
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn, or stop, as she them slacks or strains.
Darvis.

Taught power's due use to people and to kings,
Taught not to slack nor from its tender strings.
Pope.

3. To ease; to mitigate. Philips seems to have used it by mistake for flake.

Men, having been brought up at home under a strict rule of duty, always restrained by sharp penalties from lewd behaviour, so soon as they come thirther, where they see laws more slackly tended, and the hard restraint which they were used unto now
slack'd, they grow more loose. Spenser.

It there be cure or charm
To respite, or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill nation. Milton.

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all moons some succulent plant
Allow'd, that poor helpless man may in slack
His present thirst, and matter find for toil. Philips.

4. To remit for want of earnestness.
My guards

Are you, great powers, and th' unbated strength
Of a firm conscience; which shall arm each step
T' go for the state, and teach me slack no pace.
Ben Jonson.

With such delay well pleas'd, they slack their come. Milton.

5. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or create it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower than make him stand still.
Bacon.

This doctrine must supersede and slack in all industly and endeavour, which is the lowest degree of that which hath been promised to be accepted by Christ; and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate. Hammond.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wife man's countenance, if not sure; more up
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise.
Milton.

Balls of this metal slack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the amorous youth bestow'd the race.
Waller.

One concludes to the poet's aim, which he is driving on in every line: the other slackens his pace, and diverts him from his way. Dryden.

6. To relieve; to unbend.
Here have I torn the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chase by all the flow'r
Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour.
Denham.

7. To withhold; to use less liberally.
He that so generally is good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance. Shakespeare.

8. To crumble; to deprive of the power of cohesion.
Some unslack'd lime cover with ashes, and let it stand till rain comes to slack the lime; then spread them together. Mortimer.

9. To neglect.
Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that the calls servants, or from mine:
If then they chanc'd to slack ye,
We could controul them. Shakspeare.

This good chance, that thus much favour'eth,
He slacks not. Daniel.
Slack not the good preface, while heav'n inspires
Our minds to dare, and gives the ready fires.
Dryden.

10. To repress; to make less quick or forcible.
I should be griev'd, young prince, to think my preference
Unbent your thoughts, and slacken'd 'em to arms.
Addison.

SLACK. n. f. [from the verb.] Small coal;
coal broken in small parts: as slack'd
lime turns to powder.

SLACKLY. adv. [from slack.]
1. Loosely; not tightly; not closely.

2. Negligently; remissly.
That a king's children should be so convey'd,
So slackly guarded, and the search so slow
That could not trace them. Shakespeare.

SLACKNESS. n. f. [from slack.]
1. Looseness; not tightness.

2. Negligence; inattention; remissness.
It concerneth the duty of the church by law to provide, that the looseness and slackness of men may not cause the commandments of God to be unexecuted. Hooker.

These thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness. Shakespeare.

From man's effeminate slackness it begins,
Who should better hold his place
By wisdom, and superior gifts receiv'd. Milton.

3. Want of tendency; tardiness.
When they have no disposition to shoot out above their lips, there is a slackness to heal, and a cure is very difficultly effected. Sharp.

4. Weakness; not force; not intenseness.
Through the slackness of motion, or long banishment from the air, it might gather some aptness to putrefy. Brewster.

SLAG. n. f. The dross or recrement of metal.

Not only the scales but the glasses of metal may be of differing colours from the natural colour of the metal, as I have observed about the glass on flag of copper. Boyle.

SLAVE. n. f. A weaver's reed. Ainslie.

SLAIN. The participle passive of slay.
The slain of the Lord shall be many. Isaiah.

The king grew vain,
Fought all his battles o'er again;
And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew
the slain. Dryden.

To SLAKE. v. a. [from slack, Skinner;
from slack, Islandick, to quench, Lyc.]

1. To quench; to extinguish.
He did always strive Himself with selves to health for to restore,
And slake the heavenly fire that rag'd evermore.
Spenser.

If I dig'd up thy slakes there growing,
And hang their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart,
Shakespeare.

She with her cold hand slakes
His spirits, the sparks of life, and chills his heart.
Crofton.

From Isles' head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread Around his brows, and on his temples fell;
Amaz'd, with running water we prepare
To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair.
Dryden.

The fragrant fruit from bending branches fell,
And with the chrysal stream their thirst at pleasure
slake. Blackmore.

Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chase,
Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst. Adams.

2. It is used of lime: so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of To slack or slake lime, be to powder or quench it.

That which he saw happened to be fresh lime and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it.
Woodward.

To SLAKE. v. n. [This is apparently from slack.]

1. To grow less tense; to be relaxed.
If the the body's nature did partake,
Her strength would with the body's strength decay
But when the body's strongest sinews slake,
Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay.
Daniel.

2. To go out; to be extinguished.
She perceiving that his flame did slake,
And lov'd her only for his trophy's sake. Brown.

To SLAM. v. a. [slama, Islandick, schlagen Dutch.] To slaughter; to crush. A word not used but in low conversation.

To SLANDER. v. a. [eschlaundrie, Fr
scandalum, Lat.] To censure falsely to belie.

Slender Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor defence.

He hath slandered thy servant unto the king.
Shakespeare.

Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly con-mending it, as you have done in untruly and unkindly detaching and slandering it. Whigg.

Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
By practice harden'd in thy slandering trade,
Obtending heav'n's for what'er ill's behalf,
And putting under specious names thy gall. Dryden.

Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
But eases not if a thousand are undone. Pope.

SLANDER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. False invective.

When slanders do not live in tongues;
When cut-purses come not to throngs. Shakespeare.

Since that, we hear he is in arms,
We think not so;
Yet charge the confal with our harms,
That let him go!

So in our censure of the state
We fall do wander,
And make the careful magistrate
The mark of slander. Ben Jonson.

We are not to be detected by the slanders of columns of bad men, because our integrity shall then be cleared by him who cannot err in judgment. Neve.

2. Disgrace; reproach.
Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins. Shakespeare.

3. Disreputation; ill name.
You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most stepmothers,
Ill-eyed unto you. Shakespeare.

SLANDERER. n. f. [from slander.] One who belies another; one who lays false imputations on another.

In your servants suffer any offence against you;
rather than against God: endure not that they do it.

In rebut or Amulet, toll-takes, or towers of diffension.
Thou shalt answer for this, thou slanderer!
Taylor.
Dryden.

SLANDEROUS. adj. [from slander.]
1. Uttering reproachful falsehoods.

What king so strong
Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue? Shak.
To me belongs

The care to shun the blast of slanderous tongues;
Let malice, prone the virtuous to defame,
Thus with wild censure taint my spotless name.

2. Containing reproachful falsehoods; calumnious.

I was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors with the certain knowledge of their sland'rous untruths. Spenser.

We lay their honours on this man,
To eat ourselves of cheeks slanderous loads. Shakspeare.
As by battery a man opens his bottom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction and a slanderous misre-port he puts the same to his best friends. South.

SLAND'ROUSLY. adv. [from slanderous.]
Calumniously; with false reproach.

I may the better satisfy them who object these charges, and slanderously bark at the countries which are held against that traitorous earl and his adhe-rants. Spenser.

They did slanderously object,
How that they durst not hazard to present
In person their defences. Daniel.

SLANG. The preterit of sling.
David slung a stone, and smote the Philistine.
1 Samuel.

SLANK. n. f. [alga marina.] An herb.
Ainsworth.

SLANT. } adj. [from slanghe, a
SLANTING. } serpent, Dutch. Shin-
} ser. Oblique; not direct; not perpen} dicular.

Late the clouds
Jesting, or push'd with winds, rude in their flock, Lose the slant light'ning; whose thwart flame driv'n down Milton.

Kisses the gummy bark of fir and pine.
The sun round the globe describes the equator line,
By which wise means he can the whole survey
With a direct or with a slanting ray,
In the succession of a night and day. Blackmore.

SLANTLY. } adv. [from slant.] Ob-
SLANTWISE. } liquely; not perpendicu} larly; slope.

Some maketh a hollownest half a foot deep,
With fewer sets in it, let slantwise asleep. Tupper.

SLAP. n. f. [schlap, German.] A blow.
Properly with the hand open, or with something rather broad than sharp.
The laugh, the flap, the jocund curse go round.
Thompson.

SLAP. adv. [from the noun.] With a sudden and violent blow.

Peg's servants complain'd; and if they offered to come into the warehouse, then straight went the yard flap over their noddle. Arbutnot.

TO SLAP. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with a slap.

Dick, who thus long had passive sat,
Here break'd his chin, and cock'd his hat;
Then slapp'd his hand upon the board,
And thus the youth put in his word. Prior.

SLAPPAH. interj. [from slap and dah.]
All at once; as any thing broad falls with a slap into the water, and dashes it about. A low word.

And yet, slapp'dah, is all again
In a twinkling, nerve, and vein. Prior.

TO SLASH. v. a. [slasu, to strike, Island-ic.]

1. To cut; to cut with long cuts.
2. To kill. Slash is improper.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us'd to slash
The vigorous steeds that drew his lord's calash,
To Peggy's side inclin'd. King.
TO SLASH. v. n. To strike at random with a sword; to lay about him.

The knights, with their bright burning blades,
Broke their rude troops, and orders did confound, Hewing and slashing at their discharges. F. Queen.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,
Like slashing Bentley with his despatch hook. Pope.

SLASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cut; wound.
Some few received some cuts and slashes that had drawn blood. Clarendon.

2. A cut in cloth.
What! this a sleeve?
Here snip and nip, and cut, and slash and slash,
Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakspeare.

Distinguish'd slashes deck the great,
As each excels in birth or state;
His oylet-holes are more and ampler;
The king's own body was a sampler. Prior.

SLATCH. n. f. [a sea term.] The middle part of a rope or cable that hangs down loose. Bailey.

SLATE. n. f. [from slit: slate is in some counties a crack; or from esclate, a tile, French.] A gray stone, easily broken into thin plates, which are used to cover houses, or to write upon.

A square cannot be so truly drawn upon a slate
as it is conceived in the mind. Greer.

A small piece of a flat slate the ants laid over the hole of their nest, when they foresaw it would rain. Spectator.

TO SLATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover the roof; to tile.

Sonnets and elegies to Chloris,
Would raise a house about two stories,
A lyric ode would slate. Swift.

SLATER. n. f. [from slate.] One who covers with slates or tiles.

SLATERN. n. f. [slatti, Swedish.] A woman negligent, not elegant or nice.

Without the rubbing of which sun,
You dare not be so troublesome
To pinch the slatterns black and blue,
For leaving you their work to do. Hudibras.

We may always observe, that a gossip in poli-ticks is a slattern in her family. Addison.

The fallow skin is for the swarthy put,
And love can make a slattern of a slut. Dryden.

Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbands glare,
The new-fur'd d maner, and the slattern air. Gay.

SLATY. adj. [from slate.] Having the nature of slate.

All the stone that is slaty, with a texture long,
and parallel to the site of the stratum, will split only lengthways, or horizontally; and, if placed in any other position, 'tis apt to give way, flint, and burst, when any considerable weight is laid upon it. Woodward.

SLAVE. n. f. [esclave, French.] It is said to have its original from the Slavi, or Scythians, subdued and sold by the Venetians.

1. One mancipiated to a master; not a freeman; a dependant.

The haughty d Kent, who in disguise
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
Improper for a slave. Shakspeare.

Thou elvish nurse, abortive, rooting hog!
Thou that wast feed'd in thy nativity
The slave of nature, and the son of hell. Shakspeare.

Of guests he makes them slaves
Inhospitably. Milton.

The condition of servants was different from what it is now, they being generally slaves, and such as were bought and sold for money. South.

Perspective a painter must not want, yet without subduing ourselves to wholly to it, as to be compulsed of it. Dryden.

To-morrow, should we thus express our friendship,
Each might receive a slave into his arms:

This sun perhaps, this morning sun's the last
That e'er shall rise on Roman liberty. Addison.

2. One that has lost the power of resistance.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then
It grows impossible to govern men. Waller.

When once men are manacled in sensual things,
and are become slaves to their passions and lusts,
then are they most disposed to doubt of the existence of God. B. W. King.

3. It is used proverbially for the lowest state of life.

Power shall not exempt the kings of the earth, and the great men, neither shall meanness excuse
the poorest slave. Nelson.

TO SLAVE. v. n. [from the noun.] To drudge; to toil; to toil.

Had women been the makers of our laws,
The men should slave at cards from morn to night. Swift.

SLAVER. n. f. [salva, Latin; slava, Hlandiek.] Spittle running from the mouth; drivel.

Matholus hath a passage, that a tend communi-cates its venom not only by urine, but by the humidity and slaver of its mouth, which will not consist with truth. Brown.

Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right,
It is the slaver kills, and not the bite. Pope.

TO SLAVER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be smeared with spittle.

Slaver with lips as common as the flairs
That mount the capitol, you gripes with hands
Made hard with homely batchwood as with labour. Shakspeare.

2. To spit.

Miso come with scowling eyes to deliver a slaver- ing good-morrow to the two ladies. Sidney.

Why must he sputter, spawl, and slaver it,
In vain, against the people's favourite? Swift.

TO SLAVER. v. n. To smear with drivel.

Twich'd by the slave, he mouths it more and more.

Till with white froth his gown is slav'd o'er. Dryden.

SLAVERER. n. f. [slabbaerd, Dutch; from slaver.] One who cannot hold his spittle; a driveller; an idiot.

SLAVERY. n. f. [from slave.] Servitude;
the condition of a slave; the offices of a slave.

If any dissentings were out of error, weakness, or obstinacy, yet no man can think it other than the badge of slavery, by savage rudeness and importu-nate obtrusions of violence to have the mist of his error dispell'd. King Charles.

SLAUGHTER. n. f. [unplauge, Saxon, from slagan, plegan, to strike or kill.]
Massacre; destruction by the sword.

Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck for thee!
Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls. Shakspeare.

On each hand slaughter and gignuck deeds. Milton.

The pair you see,
Now friends below, in close embraces join;
But, when they leave the shady valleys of night,
With mortal hate each other shall pursue:
What wars, what wounds, what slaughter shall ensue! Dryden.

TO SLAUGHTER. v. a. [from the noun.]
To massacre; to slay; to kill with the sword.

Your castle is surpris'd, your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd. Shakspeare.

SLAUGHTERHOUSE. n. f. [slaughter and house.] House in which beasts are killed for the butcher.

A way with me, all you whose souls adore
The unclely favour of a slaughterhouse;
For I am filled with the smell of sin. Shakspeare.

SLAUGHTERMAN. n. f. [Slaughter and man.] One employed in killing.

The mad mothers with their howls confus'd
To break the clouds; as did the wives of Jewry,
At Herod's bloody hunting slaughtermen. Shaksp.
Ten chas'd by one.

Are now each one the slaughterman of twenty.

See, thou fight'st against thy countrymen;

And joint with them will be thy slaughtermen. Shaksp.

SLAUGHTEROUS. adj. [from slaughter.]

Destructive; murderous.

I have sapt full with horrors;

Thence familiar to my slaughterous thoughts Cannot once start me. Shaksp.

SLAVISH. adj. [from slave.] Servile; mean;

base; dependant.

A thing

More slavish did I never, than answering

A slave without a knock. Shaksp.

You have among you many a purchased slave,

Which, like your asses, and your dogs and mules,

You use in subject and in slavish part,

Perceive you bought them. Shaksp.

The supreme God, to whom all things live

Are but as slavish officers of vengeance;

Would I could glut my vision, if need were,

To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milton.

Those are the labour'd brows of slavish brains;

Not the effect of poetry, but pains. Dehann.

Slavish bards, our mutual loves rehearse

The long streams and ignominious voyage. Prior.

SLAVISHLY. adv. [from slavish.] Servilely; meanly.

SLAVISHNESS. n. f. [from slavish.] Servility; meanness.

To SLAY. v. a. preterit, slew; part. pass.

slain, [from slahan, Gothick; slaan, Saxon;

slachten, Dutch, to strike.] To kill; to butcher; to put to death.

Her father's brother

Would be her land; or shall I say her uncle?

Or he that slew her brothers and her uncle? Shaksp.

Tyrant, flew thy face;

If thou be't slain, and with no stroke of mine,

My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still. Shaksp.

I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God. Revelations.

Slay and make ready. Greaves.

Which killed the foolish man, and envy slain the only one. J. b.

Of Trojan chiefs he view'd a numerous train;

And much lamented, all in battle slain. Dryden.

The maid

By blood and battles pow'r maintain,

And slay the monarchs, ere he to the plain. Prior.

SLAYER. n. f. [from slay.] Killer; mur-derer; destroyer.

Wine's the guiltless blood pour'd out on ground;

The crowned often slain, the slayer crown'd. Penny Queen.

They slew those that were slayers of their countrymen. Abbot.

The slayer of him! If yet saw I thee;

The gore conceal'd was clotted in his hair;

With eyes half clos'd and gaping mouth he lay,

And ginn'd as when he breath'd his fullen soul away. Dryden.

SLEAVE. n. f. [Of this word I know not well the meaning; slave silk is explained by Gouldman, flocus sericus, a lock of silk; and the women still say, slave the silk, for untwist it. Ainsworth calls a wraver's shuttle or reed a slay. To slay is to part a twist into single fibres.]

I on a fountain light,

Whole brain with pinks was platted,

The banks with daisies and dillies light

With grass like slaves was matted. Dryden.

SLEAVE. adj. [often written slave.]

Weak; wanting substance. This seems to be of the same race with slave, or from to slay.

SLED. n. f. [slæd, Danish; slidde, Dutch.]

A carriage drawn with out wheels.

The sled, the tumbrel, hurle, and the sled.

These all must be prepar'd. Dryden.

SLEDDED. adj. [from slæd.] Mounted on a sled.

So trown'd he once when in an angry pail,

He smote the sledded Polack on the ice. Shaksp.

SLEDGE. n. f. [pleeg, Saxon; sluggia,

Illandick.]

1. A large heavy hammer.

They him spying, both with greedy force,

At once upon him ran, and him beset,

With strokes of mortal steel, without remorse,

And on his shield like iron sledges let. T. Queen.

The painful smith, with force of fervent heat,

The hardest iron soon doth mollify.

That with his heavy sledge he can it beat,

And fashion to what he it lit apply. Spenser.

The upland sledge is used by under-workmen,

when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter and draw it out; they use it with both their hands before them, and seldom hit their hammer higher than their head. Mason.

It would follow that the quick stroke of a light hammer should be of greater efficacy than any softer and more gentle striking of a great sledge. Watkins.

2. A carriage without wheels, or with very low wheels; properly a sled. See SLED.

In sledge they use a sort of sledge made with thick wheels, to bring their mail out, drawn with one horse. Mortimer.

SLEEK. adj. [slaych, Dutch.]

1. Smooth; nitid; glossy.

Let me have men about me that are fat,

Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep a-nights. Shaksp.

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,

As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton

Ye appear in ev'ry thing may bring my ruin. Shaksp.

What time the groves were clad in green,

The fields all dress'd in flowers,

And that the sleek hair'd nymphs were seen

To seek them summer bowers. Dryden.

As in gaze admiring, oft he bow'd

His turret crest, and sleek channel'd neck,

Fawning. Milton.

The head and hair are sleek,

And then thou kemb'st the tuzes on thy cheek. Dryden.

So sleek her skin, so faultless was her make,

Ev'n Juno did unwilling pleasure take

To see so fair a rival. Dryden.

2. Not rough; not harsh.

Those rugged names to our little mouths grow sleek,

That would have made Quinlan stare and gasp. Milton.

To SLEEK. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To comb smooth and even.

Yet were the men more loose than they,

More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rubb'd, and trimm'd,

More sleek'd, more tuff, and slacker limb'd. Ben Jonson.

By dead Parthenope's dear tomb,

And fair Ligea's golden comb,

Wherewith the fits on diamond rocks

Sleeking her tott'ring locks. Milton.

2. To render soft, smooth, or glossy.

Gentle my lord, sleek o'er your rugged locks;

Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests to-night. Shaksp.

She does sleek

With crumbs of bread and milk, and lies a-nights

In her neat gloves. Ben Jonson.

The persuasive rhetoric

That sleek'd his tongue, and won to much on Eve,

So little here, may lost. Milton.

A fleet of well sleek'd marble paper did not cut any of its distinct colours upon the wall. Bayle.

A crate of fragrance form'd of burnish'd gold,

Odour divine! whose soft retreating dreams

Sleek the smooth fan, and seat the mossy limbs. Pope.

SLEEKLY. adv. [from sleek.] Smoothly;

glossily.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, and their coats brush'd. Shaksp.

SLEEKSTONE. n. f. [slack and stone.] A smoothing stone.

The purple sleekstone with a sleekstone rub and as even as you can. Penny Queen.

To SLEEP. v. n. [slæpan, Gothick; slæpan,

Saxon; slapen, Dutch.]

1. To take rest, by suspension of the mental and corporal powers.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard

Some time I shall sleep out; the rest I'll whistle. Shaksp.

Where's Pede?—go you, and where you mind, Shaksp.

That, ere the sleep, hath thrice her prayers said,

Rein up the organs of her sanity,

Deep she is found as caskets' mummy.

But those that sleep, and think not on their fate,

Punch them, arms, legs, backs, if oulders, faces, and flims. Shaksp.

If the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with sleep. Deuteronomy.

Peace, good reader! do not weep,

Pence! the lovers are asleep;

Their sweet tinctles! folded he

In the last knot that love could tie,

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,

Till this terny night be gone,

And the eternal morrow dawn,

Then the curtains will be drawn,

And they waken with that light

Whole day shall never sleep in night. Crow.

Those who at any time sleep without dream,

can never be convinced that their thoughts are four hours busy without their knowing it. Locke.

2. To rest; to be motionless.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out, butley-boned clown in chimes of beef ere I in thy death, I beteech Jove on my knees

may it be turned into hubbards. Shaksp.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this lake

Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music

Creep in our ears. Shaksp.

The giddy ship, betwixt the winds and waves,

Port'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,

Stunn'd with the different blows, then flows and

Till counterblast'd the tops, and sleeps again. Pope.

3. To live thoughtlessly.

We sleep over our happiness, and want to route into a quick thankful sense of it. Locke.

4. To be dead; death being a state in which man will some time awake.

If we believe that Jesus died, and rose even to them also which sleep in Jesus, who bring with him. 1 Cor. 15.

A person is said to be dead to the world cannot raise from the grave; though he rises unto God, who can raise from the dead.

5. To be inattentive; not vigilant.

Heaven will one day open

The king's eyes, that for long have sleep'd upon

This bed, bad man. Shaksp.

6. To be unmotivated, or unattended.

You ever

Have wish'd the sleeping of this business over

Deh'd it to be hurried. Shaksp.

SLEEP. n. f. [from the verb.] Repose; suspension of the mental and corporeal powers; slumber.

Methought I heard a voice cry, sleep no more

Macbeth doth murder sleep; the innocent sleep

sleep, that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care

The birth of each day's life, fore labour's sleep

Palms of hurt minds, great nature's sleep

Chief nourisher in life's feast. Shaksp.

That sleep might twice to be

His reitill eyes, he enter'd, and in his bed

In silence took. Shaksp.

Cold calleth the spirits to succour, and the

they cannot so well close and pucker their head, which is ever requisite to sleep. And.

that came, and with noise hinders sleep, and darkness furthereth sleep.

Beasts that sleep in winter, as wild bears, during their sleep was very fat, though they eat nothing.

His fallen'd hands the ruddy sleep
And, fix'd on heav'n, his eyes repel invading sleep.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd;
His hat adorn'd with wings disclose'd the god,
And in his hand the sleep compelling rod. Dryden.
Infants spend the greatest part of their time in sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat, or some pain forces the mind to perceive it. Locke.

SLEEPER. n. f. [from sleep.]

1. One who sleeps; one who is not awake.
Sound, maulick; come, my queen, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be.

What's the business,
That such an hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? Shakespeare.
In some countries, a plant which shutteth in the night, openeth in the morning, and openeth wide at noon, the inhabitants say is a plant that sleepeth. There be sleepers now then; for almost all flowers do the like. Bacon.

Night is indeed the province of his reign;
Yet all his dark exploits no more contain
Than a spy taken, and a sleeper slain. Dryden.
2. A lazy inactive drone.

He must be no great eater, drinker, nor sleeper,
that will discipline his senses, and exert his mind;
every worthy undertaking requires both. Grey.
3. That which lies dormant, or without effect.

Let penal laws, if they have been sleepers of long, or if grown unfit for the present time, be by us judiciously confined in the execution. Bacon.

4. [crowetus.] A fish. Ainsworth.

SLEEPILY, adv. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsily; with desire to sleep.

2. Dull; lazily.
I rather choose to endure the wounds of those darts, which envy casteth at novelty, than to go on safely and sleepily in the easy ways of ancient mistakings. Raleigh.

3. Stupidly.
He could make us believe that Luther in these actions pretended to authority, forgetting what he had sleepily owned before. Atterbury.

SLEEPINESS, n. f. [from sleepy.] Drowsiness; disposition to sleep; inability to keep awake.

Watchfulness precedes too great sleeping, and is the most ill-boding symptom of a fever. Arbuthnot.

SLEEPLESS, adj. [from sleep.] Wanting sleep; always awake.

The field
To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd,
Though after sleepless night. Milton.
While penitence pacts painful vigils keep,
Sleepless themselves to give their readers sleep. Pope.

SLEEPY, adj. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsily; disposed to sleep.

2. Not awake.
Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must be there—Go, carry them, and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood. Shakespeare.
She wak'd her sleepy crew,
And, rising hasty, took a short adieu. Dryden.

3. Soporiferous; soporiferous; causing sleep.
We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses Wantelligence of our insouciance, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us. Shakespeare.
Let such bewitch them, if the sleepy dromch
Of that forgetful lute be numb not still. Milton.
I slept about eight hours, and no wonder; for the physician had mingled a sleepy potion in the wine. Gulliver.

SLEET, n. f. [perhaps from the Danish slæt.] A kind of smooth final hail or
VOL. II.

snow, not falling in flakes, but single particles.

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles huffing up behind.
Who view, far off, the storm of falling sleet,
And hear their thunder rattling in the wind. Dryden.
Perpetual sleet and driving snow
Obscure the skies, and hang on herds below,
Huge oxen stand inclos'd in wintry walls
Of snow congel'd. Dryden.

Rains would have been poured down, as the vapours became cooler; next sleet, then snow, and ice. Chyane.

TO SLEET, v. n. [from the noun.] To snow in small particles, intermixed with rain.

SLEET'Y, adj. [from the noun.] Bringing sleet.

SLEEVE, n. f. [rluf, Saxon.]

1. The part of the garment that covers the arms.

Once my well-voicing eyes espied my treasure,
With leeves twin'd up, loose hair, and breast enlarged,
Her father's corn, moving her fair limbs, measure.

The deep smock sleeve, which the Irish women use, they say, was of Spanish, and yet that should seem rather to be an old English fashion: for in armor, the fashion of the manchet, which is given in arms, being nothing else but a sleeve, is fashioned much like to that sleeve. And knights, in ancient times, used to wear their mistress's or love's sleeve upon their arms; for Launcelot wore the sleeve of the fair maid of Asteloth in a tourney. Spenser.

Your hose should be ungartered, your sleeve unbuttoned, your shoe untied, demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakespeare.

2. SLEEVE, in some provinces, signifies a knot or skein of silk, which is by some very probably supposed to be its meaning in the following passage. [See SLEAVE.]

The innocent sleep;
Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care. Shaks.

3. Sleeve, Dutch, signifies a cover; any thing spread over: which seems to be the sense of sleeve in the proverbial phrase.

A brace of sharpers laugh at the whole roguery in their sleeves. I. Effrange.

Men know themselves utterly void of those qualities which the impudent hypocrite ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing. South.

John laughed heartily in his sleeve at the pride of the esquire. Arbuthnot.

4. To hang on a sleeve; to make dependent.

It is not for a man which doth know, or should know, what orders, and what peaceable government requireth, to ask why we should hang our judgment upon the church's sleeve, and why in matters of orders more than in matters of doctrine. Hooker.

5. [lolligo, Latin.] A fish. Ainsworth.

SLEEVED, adj. [from sleeve.] Having sleeves.

SLEEVELESS, adj. [from sleeve.]

1. Wanting sleeves; having no sleeves.

Sleeveless his jerkin was, and it had been Velvet; but 'twas now, so much ground was seen, Become tufflusty. Donne.

They put on sleeveless coats of home-spun cotton. Smollett.

Behold you idle by palmers, pilgrims, trod,
Grave numerals! Sleeveless some, and shrill to others. Pope.

2. Wanting reasonableness; wanting propriety; wanting solidity. [This sense, of which the word has been long satisfied, I know not well how it obtained. Skinner thinks it properly liveless or lifeless; to this I cannot heartily agree, though I know not what better to suggest. Can it come from leeve, a leeve or leeve, and so signify unconnected, hanging ill together? or from sleeve, a cover, and therefore means plainly absurd, foolish without palliation?]

This sleeveless tale of transubstantiation was brought into the world by that other fable of the multiplicity. Hall.

My landlady quarrelled with him for sending every one of her children on a sleeveless errand, as she calls it. Spectator.

SLEIGHT, n. f. [slagd, cunning; Islandick.]

Artful trick; cunning artifice; dexterous practice: as, slight of hand, the tricks of a juggler. This is often written, but less properly, slight.

He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, doth not give counsel to be impolitic; but rather to be all prudent foresight, lest our duplicity be over-reached by cunning slights. Hooker.

Fair Una to the red cross knight
Betwixt is with joy.

Though false Diessa, it to bar,
Her talk slights do employ. Fairy Queen.

Upon the corner of the moon,
There hangs a vapour drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground;
And that distill'd by magic slights,
Shall raise such artificial spirits,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare.

Out step the ample size
Of mighty Ajax, huge in strength; to him, Laertes' son,

That crafty one as huge in slight. Chapman.

She could not so convey

The wally substance of that idol great;

What slight had the the wardens to betray?

What strength to heave the goddess from her feast? Fairfax.

In the wily snake
Whatsoever slights, none would suspicious mask,
As from his wit and native subtilty Proceeding. Milton.

Doubtless the pleasure is as great
Of being cheated, as to cheat;
As lookers on feel most delight,
That least perceive the juggler's slight. Hudibras.
Good humour is but a slight of hand, or a faculty making truth look like appearances, or appearances like truths. I. Effrange.

When we hear death related, we are all willing to favour the slight, when the poet does not too grossly impute upon us.

While innocent he seems ignoble slight,
His honest friends preserve him by a slight. Swift.

SLENDER, adj. [slinder, Dutch.]
